North Carolina's Specialty Food

Good, made-from-scratch food has always been part and parcel of the Southern hospitality our area of the country is known. Whether it's a finely-rolled Moravian cookie or a mouth-watering cheddar cheese straw with just the right hint of cayenne, these products are specialties that have been served in Southern homes for centuries.

Products with a cultural history, such as delicately roasted coffee beans, have paved the way for the new North Carolina specialty food offerings. From smokin' salsas to candied peanuts, chocolates to pimento cheese, the flavor and diversity of North Carolina's kitchens are abundant.

The North Carolina Specialty Foods Association is a dynamic organization serving more than 60 Tar Heel companies. Its mission is to actively encourage and support the promotion and appreciation of the state's specialty food, beverage and wine products.
