LXXXVI - No. 4

April 2011

Raleigh, N.C.

On the Horizon

North Carolina is home to more than 45 county agricultural fairs, with the majority of them holding their events in late summer or early fall. The county fairs are great ways to showcase North Carolina agriculture, along with the crafting, cooking and art skills of county residents.

This year the Harnett County Regional Agricultural Fair is being held earlier than most fairs. It will be held May 2-7 in Lillington.

We have included a list of county and regional fairs in previous editions of the Agricultural Review. Because of space limitations this month, readers should go to www.ncagr.gov/markets/fairs for a link to a more complete list of 2011 county fair dates.

Got to Be NC Festival returns May 20-22 in Raleigh

The 2011 Got to Be NC Festival, a celebration of North Carolina's agricultural bounty, will return to the N.C. State Fairgrounds May 20-22.

This three-day celebration features antique tractors, Food and Wine Expo, Fiber Fair, carnival, draft horses, music and more. Gate admission and parking are free.

"This festival is an excellent showcase of North Carolina's farm products, and will give consumers a chance to meet the farmers and companies that provide the diverse products we offer," said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. "We've expanded the Food and Wine Expo to include cheeses from around the state and a farmers market. The Fiber Fair will be bigger and will move into the Graham Building along with commercial exhibits and the new Sports Zone."

Dorton Arena will host a classic car cruise-in on Friday evening, and the Carolina Rollergirls will host a regional roller derby competition all day on Saturday with paid admission. The grandstand will feature a draft horse pull Friday evening and antique tractor pull Saturday. All grandstand events will be free.

The festival joins forces with local music organization PineCone for the first

N.C. Old-Time Fiddle Championship on Saturday afternoon on the outdoor stage near Dorton Arena. The stage will host musical acts from around the state throughout the weekend.

The Shriners will return with their "Go Fish Friday" featuring N.C. seafood on May 20, and the Masons are expanding the N.C. Pig Jig on Saturday, featuring barbecue cooking teams Dairy farmers will vote May 24 on whether to continue to allocate a portion of the mandatory national dairy check-off fee collected for North Carolina dairy promotions. Currently, 10 cents of the 15 cents collected per hundredweight of milk is designated to dairy promotions in North Carolina. The remaining 5 cents goes to National Dairy Promotion and Research Board. N.C. dairy producers must vote every six years to renew the 10-cent local promotion option through the N.C. Dairy Referendum. Every dairy farm in the state has one vote, and to pass the referendum, two-thirds of those voting must approve the measure. Dairymen should contact their local N.C. Cooperative Extension Service to find their voting location.

From the tractor

by Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler

I wanted to update our readers on the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Service's latest trade efforts in China. Some of you may have heard that I led a trade delegation of cotton, peanut, soybean, tobacco and wheat producers and organizations to China in early March. It is the second trade mission I have headed up to China. The last one was in 2009.

In addition to meeting with potential buyers and others involved in agricultural trade, we also officially opened our first trade office in China in Beijing. I am extremely excited about this prospect and expect big returns on this investment for North Carolina agriculture.

I know some people would question why we need to focus so much attention on boosting overseas trade now especially in light of the current budget situation, but I believe we cannot afford to ignore such a large potential market for ag products. Beijing alone, China's capital city, has 22 million people. China's total population is more than 1.3 billion people compared to around 310 million in the United States.

The opening of a trade office in Beijing sends a signal about our commitment to trade with China. I think you can take the attitude that we'll wait, wait, wait for things to get better, or you take the attitude we're going to make things better. This office is a step toward making things better and continuing to grow agriculture and agribusiness in North Carolina. We know how important world trade is now, but it will be even more important in the future as worldwide demand ratchets up, and we want to have North Carolina positioned to take advantage of that demand.

When it comes to the Chinese market, I believe we have only started to scratch the surface of trade opportunities.

China is poised to become North Carolina's largest export market. In 2010, North Carolina's agricultural exports to China were $542 million, doubling from $271 million in 2008. Currently, Japan is our top export partner.

In 2009, total U.S. farm exports to China were a from across the state.

The Got to be NC Festival is a production of the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services. More information and updated schedules are available at the festival website, www.ncagfest.com. A limited number of commercial exhibit and sponsor space is still available both inside the Graham Building and outdoors.

A daily parade of tractors is one of the highlights for many visitors to the Got to Be NC Festival. In addition to tractors, festival-goers will find a Food and Wine Expo, a Fiber Fest, exhibits and displays, carnival rides, music and much more. The festival makes its return to the State Fairgrounds May 20-22.

China

record $13.2 billion. That tells me two things – that North Carolina farm commodities make up just a small part of current farm exports and there is room to expand.

As part of our trip, we met with staff from the U.S. Embassy and from the Foreign Agricultural Service office who offered some additional points of optimism about the growth potential in China. Specifically, FAS staff pointed to 2009 being a record export year, but also added that growth in Chinese food demand is exceeding growth in domestic supply, Chinese farmland is down 10 percent since the late 1990s, the average farm size is one acre and Chinese food expenditures are expected to double by 2025 because of a rising middle class, rural to urban migration, strong growth in meat and dairy consumption and an improving distribution system.

U.S. agricultural exports are seen by Embassy and FAS staff as a promising area for helping China to bring down current trade imbalances with the United States.

The goals of our trade office is to establish relationships in China with members of the agricultural industry, trade organizations and the government's agricultural contacts, to get to know North Carolina companies working in China and to develop potential market contacts. I also see this office working with North Carolina producers, helping them navigate the business waters in China and helping provide contacts and translation assistance.

Our 30-person trade delegation included representatives from the N.C. Agribusiness Council Inc., Burley Stabilization Corp., Carolinas Cotton Cooperative, N.C. Cotton Producers Association, Golden Grove Candy, N.C. Small Grain Growers Association, N.C. Soybean Producers Association, N.C. State University, Tobacco Associates, Tobacco Growers Association of North Carolina, U.S. Tobacco Cooperative, Universal Leaf and White Hat Seed Farm.

I look forward to providing more updates from our trade mission in the future, particularly as our growers generate sales from this trip. I am optimistic that we will see sales from this effort, but I am even more optimistic that we are laying the foundation for increased trade in the future.
