Peach growers to vote in April on assessment

N.C. peach growers can vote on an assessment for commercial orchards during a mail-in referendum in April. The assessment was proposed by the N.C. Peach Growers Society to generate funds for peach research and marketing.

Ballots will be mailed to each commercial orchard in the state on April 1. Growers will have 10 days to return the ballots. Ballots will also be available at local N.C. Cooperative Extension offices, or may be downloaded at <http://peaches.ces.ncsu.edu>.

To vote, an individual must be 18 years old by April 1 and also be an orchard owner.

If passed, the annual assessment would be based on the total number of peach trees per commercial orchard, with assessments ranging from $100-$350.

The assessment would be in effect from January 2015 through December 2020.

N.C. continues to lose farms, but rate of land loss slows

The rate of farmland loss in North Carolina slowed over a five-year period even as the number of farms continued to fall, a recent review of the federal Census of Agriculture shows.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture conducts an agricultural census every five years and released preliminary results of the 2012 survey in February.

North Carolina had 2,700 fewer farms in 2012 than it did in 2007. The state's 50,210 farms occupy 8.41 million acres of land. In 2007, there were 52,913 farms on 8.47 million acres.

The 62,560-acre drop is significantly less than the amount the state lost over the previous five years. From 2002 to 2007, the decrease was 600,000 acres.

State Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler said a few factors may have slowed the loss of farmland. "The recession reduced the demand for land for residential and commercial development," he said. "But starting in 2005, the state also established the Agricultural Development and Farmland Preservation Trust Fund to help counties and conservation groups protect working farms and forests, and this program has been beneficial.

"Even so, the loss of 2,700 farms is troubling at a time when worldwide demand for food continues to grow. We also know that North Carolina is gaining about 100,000 people a year, which will only increase the pressure on farmland. We clearly have to step up our conservation efforts. It's a priority I will work on with the General Assembly this year."

Other census findings:

-- The average size of a North Carolina farm is 168 acres, eight more than in 2007.

-- The average age of N.C. farmers jumped 3 percent to 58.9.

-- Nationally, the average age is 58.3.

-- Between 2007 and 2012, the market value of N.C. agricultural products sold increased 22 percent to $12.6 billion. The per-farm average value of sales grew by 28 percent to $250,089.

-- Seventy-eight percent of N.C. farms have been in operation 10 years or more.

The USDA will release additional census data in the spring.

NCDA&CS seed lab testing for germination and purity

This is a busy time of year for farmers, when they have their attention on the field, finalizing plans for what crops to grow, determining how much seed to buy and tuning up equipment to make sure everything is field-ready.

It is also the time of year when the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services' seed lab is busy testing germination rates and purity on a variety of seeds including soybeans, wheat, oats, peanuts and vegetables. This is a service to seed producers in the state as well as the farmers who buy seed, said Danny Turner, Seed and Fertilizer Section manager. The lab also tests grass seed, which is a benefit to homeowners.

"What we do is all about the quality of the products and truth in labeling," Turner said. "What it says on the bag, is what is supposed to be in the bag."

A number of seed producers in the state grow crops specifically for seed. Turner estimates 75 to 80 percent of soybean and small grain seeds are grown within the state. Some of these businesses also buy and process from other seed growers. These crops earn a higher price, so a lot of extra work goes into them, coupled with a lot of expectation that they will produce good plants.

"When it comes to seed production, these companies have employees whose job it is to scout the fields and make sure the crop is as healthy as it can be. They scout it for disease and weeds and it has to be kept separate from any other seed varieties," Turner said. "When you sell it for seed, it is a premium. They will clean it, will keep the moisture down in the seeds, and will store it in a controlled environment."

High-quality seed is important to a successful growing season, and the work of the seed lab helps farmers know they are getting what they pay for.

Unlike a backyard gardener who may pick up a pack or two of vegetable seeds for $2 to $3 each, farmers are buying bulk quantities of seed and the cost can add up quickly.

"Cotton seed, particularly that with weed- and disease-resistant technology, can run nearly $500 a bag, corn seed from $250-$300 a bag and soybeans around $45 a bag," Turner said. "They are not cheap commodities. If we don't test it, a farmer is left wondering if he is getting what he paid for. The label is all he's got to go on. You can't tell whether seed will germinate or not just by looking at it with the naked eye. And seed that doesn't

Commissioner Troxler

I grew up with a love of agriculture, and knew at a fairly early age that I wanted to be a farmer. I began farming in earnest while I was still in college, starting small with a few acres and operating a roadside stand. I slowly grew my farm, adding more land and equipment as I went along.

It is hard, honest work, but it is also rewarding to see what I have been able to accomplish and build through both

by Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler

good and bad production years.

Farming is not for everyone, but a couple of activities I participated in recently have encouraged me that more young people are thinking about agriculture as a career.

The state FFA officers recently dropped by for a brief visit and I was happy to get to share my story and talk to them about agriculture and the department. They asked some really good questions about the future of agriculture and my vision for the industry. I was pleased that several students are planning to major in an animal agriculture-related field, while others were looking at ag business management, ag education and environmental fields. We need bright young minds in agriculture.

To follow up that meeting, the students returned a week or two later and spent two days learning more about the work of the department and the various types of programs we are involved in. We employ people in a wide range of fields here at the department, including scientists, lab technicians, foresters, marketing specialists, veterinarians, truck drivers, research technicians, entomologists, soil scientists, pesticide inspectors, human resources professionals, accounting technicians, engineers and more. I hope their visit helped further fuel their interest in agriculture.

In addition to the FFA students, I also recently had an opportunity to meet with third-graders at General Greene Elementary School in Greensboro through the Bonnie Plants 3rd Grade Cabbage Program.

More than 53,000 North Carolina third-graders received a cabbage plant from Bonnie Plants. The students grew the plant and had to submit a photo of the student and the plant for the contest. Each class selected a winner and those winners were eligible to win a $1,000 scholarship from Bonnie Plants. There was one student winner per state.

Cassady Teague of Guilford County was the state winner. She planted her cabbage in May last year and harvested the 17-pound cabbage in September.

It is easy to say Cassady has a pretty green thumb; it was a beautiful cabbage plant. I was proud that the winner came from my home county, although that was just a lucky coincidence.

The average age of farmers in the state is 58, so we know we have an aging population. I am convinced that agriculture and agribusiness will soon be a $100

Board sets 2014 N.C. boll weevil assessment at $1 per acre

The board of the Boll Weevil Eradication Foundation of North Carolina has set the 2014 boll weevil assessment at $1 per acre of cotton. This amount is 30 cents more than the 2013 assessment and reflects the foundation's support of a new National Cotton Council initiative for a boll weevil buffer zone in south Texas.

In addition, the fee supports the foundation's efforts to monitor cotton acreage in North Carolina for any re-introduction of the boll weevil and to respond promptly with eradication treatments if necessary. The boll weevil was eradicated in the state in 1986.

"Cotton remains a significant crop for North Carolina, and our cotton growers want to keep the boll weevil as far away from the state as possible, which is why the National Cotton Council's initiative has the support of both the N.C. Cotton Producers Association and the N.C. Farm Bureau," said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. "Overall, the boll weevil assessment is an excellent investment for growers, ensuring any spot re-introductions of boll weevils in this state are identified and dealt with quickly."

Foundation contractors will install and monitor traps from late summer until after harvest and frost. Because the focus of North Carolina's program has shifted from eradication to monitoring, the number of traps in fields has decreased. As such, each trap is critical, and farmers are encouraged to contact the foundation if traps are damaged or knocked down.

More than 8,600 traps were placed and maintained in North Carolina last year, with each trap monitoring an average of 52.6 acres. To allow for trapping and monitoring, cotton growers are required to certify cotton acreage information with their local U.S. Farm Service Agency office by July 15.

Farmers in 54 counties grew 453,096 certified acres of cotton last year. The top three cotton-growing counties were Halifax, Northampton and Martin.

billion industry, which means there will be opportunities in agriculture, especially with a growing world population that will need food, fiber and renewable fuels.

It is an exciting time to be in agriculture as we will be challenged to stretch well beyond current production numbers and yields to meet future food demands. I am proud that North Carolina is in a position to be a leader in this field and I want to ensure agriculture remains our leading industry for many years to come.

Seed lab

Seed samples are submitted by producers or collected by field inspectors. Most of the farm supply stores get their seed in by bulk, ranging from 50-pound bags to 2,000-pound boxes. Inspectors check labeling on the seed as well as for the nine-month test statement. Seed not meeting the stated germination rates or purity will be pulled from sale. There are around 4,500 seed retailers in the state.

By law, most agricultural seed that germinates below 70 percent cannot be sold as seed, Turner said. “You want so many plants per acre, so if seed has a low germination rate, it would take more to get the plant population to the level a farmer would want for a field,” he added.

The seed lab underwent a major renovation in 2011, but the work for its 13 employees has remained largely the same, with workers carefully preparing samples in wet paper towels and reviewing the sprouts that emerge from the seed to see if the seeds are viable.

Germination rates vary by seed type, so testing can take days or weeks to complete.

NCDA&CS seed lab analyst Nicole Gibson prepares corn seed for germination and purity testing.

Given the wide variety of seeds that can come into the lab, each seed analyst undergoes extensive training on recognition of types of seeds, how to prepare seeds for testing, what to look for in terms of proper germination and how to identify weed seeds and other foreign materials in packages of seeds.

To earn national certification accreditation, analysts have to take a test. “Analysts have to know 250 different weeds seeds because they don’t know which seeds they will get on their tests,” Turner said. “Overall, seed analysts go through a rigorous process involving two to three years of training.”

Some of the seeds the analysts are working with are so small that the work must be done under a microscope. More and more coated seed are coming into the lab, Turner said, with some varieties already pretreated with fungicide or insecticides. For the lab to process these seeds, all the coating has to be scraped off and removed.

“I feel like what we do is an important service,” Turner said. “Whether you are a backyard gardener or a farmer planting a thousand acres, it is a good tool to ensure you are getting what you pay for.”

AgroTips

Check your crop’s sulfur needs.

Before planting, study your soil report carefully. Throughout North Carolina, soil levels of sulfur can be critically low. This plant nutrient moves easily out of the root zone in sandy coastal plain soils or sandy bottom lands in the western part of the state. In the piedmont, heavy clay soils may restrict root growth and limit access to sulfur reserves. Your NCDA&CS soil report indicates whether application of additional sulfur is necessary. If heavy rains occur early in the season, it is advisable to check sulfur levels again.

Use plant tissue and solution analyses to manage fertility of greenhouse tomatoes.

Tomatoes and other greenhouse crops benefit from intensive management. Have source water samples tested before nutrient solutions are mixed so you can identify and correct any potential problems. After mixing nutrient solutions, submit samples to make sure injectors are working properly and target concentrations are being achieved. Finally, collect plant tissue samples weekly to monitor the crop’s nutrient status and adjust fertilizer rates accordingly.

For effective bermudagrass sprayfield maintenance, remove winter annuals.

Harvest on time, even if weather is less than ideal. Remove the overseed at the “boot” stage of growth-prior to emergence of seed heads from the sheath. For rye, this is usually early April but varies with species and weather. In some years, follow-up harvests of the winter annual may be needed.

Early April is seldom a good time to dry hay in the field, so plan to remove the winter annual as chopped or baled silage. Timely harvest of the winter annual permits bermuda to emerge from dormancy and develop leaf area before summer annual grasses and weeds germinate. If annual ryegrass was sown, plan on multiple harvests. A herbicide may be warranted for heavy regrowth.

Submit soil samples for lawns and gardens (and some crops) now.

Now is a good time for horticulturists and homeowners to prepare for their spring gardening and landscape projects by taking soil samples. Warm-season grasses and many landscape plants will benefit from lime and fertilizer applied in the coming months. If you haven’t already done so, there is still time to take samples from fields where you intend to plant late spring crops like burley tobacco, cotton and bermudagrass pastures. In April, the lab can normally process samples within two weeks. When you receive your report, pay particular attention to lime recommendations and make application as soon as possible for maximum effectiveness.

WNC Brewer’s Grain Alliance: Preparing for Western N.C.’s sudsy future

The craft beer industry is booming in the mountains of North Carolina, as evidenced by the expansion and addition of three major craft brewers: Sierra Nevada in Mills River, Oskar Blues in Brevard and New Belgium in Asheville. Cows may not be the customers the breweries had in mind; but spent grains, a byproduct of the brewing process, could help feed more cattle in the western part of the state.

Spent grains are the byproduct when brewers extract the sugar from malt to make beer. Grains are full of fiber, protein and carbohydrates, and the brewing process produces a lot of them. According to the Western N.C. Brewer’s Grain Alliance, the major breweries are producing around 664 tons per week, and its growing.

“Farmers can supplement a portion of a cow’s diet with spent grains,” said Bill Yarborough, special assistant with the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services. “With three major craft breweries coming to the area, we have the possibility of feeding up to 20,000 head of cattle.”

The breweries produce huge amounts of spent grains, and area farmers are eager for a local source of feed for the cattle. “If the breweries don’t have some place lined up to take their spent grains, it stops their whole business model,” Yarborough said. “The grains must be used within 48 hours, unless it is dried or put in bags, because it will start to mold. I’ve seen them giving it to the cows still steaming from the brewery.”

Cows feeding on spent grains.

WNC Communities, an organization that supports community development and agricultural initiatives across a 20-county region, created the WNC Brewer’s Grain Alliance to help connect farmers with the growing supply of spent grain. “Currently we have about 50 farmers or producers in the alliance serving about 8,000 to 10,000 cattle,” said L.T. Ward, vice president of WNC Communities. “The best thing we can do to support breweries and farmers is to find a way to connect the two as cheaply as we can, while keeping it local and benefiting the brewery.”

The intent of the alliance is to deliver the grains at a lower-than-market cost. Currently, they are offering grain about 15 to 20 percent cheaper than average market cost. Spent grains are already about 15 to 20 percent cheaper than other feed sources.

Ward sees this readily available source of feed contributing to an increase in the cattle industry. “There is a high demand in the beef market right now and we see many farmers retaining their heifers for breeding instead of feed stock,” he said. “This points to farmers feeling comfortable growing the size of their herds.”

The WNC Brewer’s Grain Alliance was awarded $20,000 from the Tennessee Valley Authority Ag & Forestry Fund to help establish itself as an entity that will work with local breweries, area livestock producers, transportation providers, researchers and others to match the supply of wet grains to the demand for lower-cost feed. New Belgium also contributed $10,000 to help the alliance get started.

“Our main goal is to be a local connection between these breweries and farmers,” Ward said. The alliance is currently working under a memorandum of understanding with New Belgium to pick up its spent grains and transport them to local farmers. The alliance is working to build relationships with the other breweries as well. “Once the breweries are at full capacity, the alliance should be able to help connect 80 to 100 farmers and 16,000 cattle with grains,” Ward said.

While working with farmers may be a central goal of the WNC Brewer’s Grain Alliance, it is also working with N.C. State University and the Mountain Research Station in Waynesville on spent-grain research trials.

“Last year we had about 60 tons of spent grain delivered,” said Kaleb Rathbone, research operations manager at the Mountain Research Station. “The grain was used in feed storage trials and feed efficiency trials at the station.”

The feeding trials include steers and heifers and researches feed efficiency and weight gain. The station is also using an agricultural-feed bagger to store the grain and then blend it with other feeds such as hay as a way to increase shelf-life and feed quality.
