From the tractor

Steve Troxler
Commissioner

Every so often I like to use this column to highlight the work of divisions of the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services. With the recent recall of fish from Vietnam, I thought it would be a good time to talk about food safety and the role the department plays in checking our food products.

Food safety is a top priority of the department and one that I see becoming a bigger issue for consumers. Unfortunately, it is something we sometimes tend to take for granted until a large recall makes the news.

We are fortunate to have one of the safest food supplies in the world, but no one will tell you any system is perfect. There are lots of opportunities in the food chain for food to come in contact with potentially sickening bacteria – including our own kitchens.

Many countries have different rules involving food production, and it is safe to say the United States' rules are among the most stringent. In the case of the fish, they were recalled after the our department discovered residue from an antibiotic not approved for use in farm-raised fish.

In mid-August, we will be hosting representatives from our congressional delegation for an annual AgFirst conference. During this meeting we will discuss a variety of agricultural issues of concern to our state. Food safety will be one of the issues we will be talking about because it is also an issue of national importance.

NCDA & CS protecting rare plants with dye marking program

The spring-green and reddish Venus flytrap plant, which eats small insects and endlessly fascinates many school kids and adults, is getting a helping hand from scientists interested in protecting the plants for future generations to enjoy.

The Venus flytrap, with its claw-like carnivorous appendages, grows naturally in the world only in North Carolina and parts of South Carolina. The area is essentially within about a 90-mile radius of Wilmington.

While the plant has yet to be placed on the list for endangered or threatened species, it is noted

A volunteer shows a young plant that had been uprooted by recent poachers. This Venus flytrap was replanted.

as a plant of "special concern," said Laura Gadd, a botanist for the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services. (See Venus, pg. 3)

Farmers urged to test all forage; abnormally high nitrate levels found

Exceptionally high levels of nitrates in various types of forages are being found in samples submitted to the state food and drug laboratory, meaning that farmers and other livestock producers should have forage crops tested to keep their livestock safe, said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler.

The lab has come across abnormally high results in more than a sixth of submitted samples, with results being up to four times higher than what is normally considered dangerous. These levels can make the feed fatal for farm animals.

"Farmers have a lot invested in their livestock and it is critical they test these types of feed to protect their investment," Troxler said. "In 2002, the year of the last severe drought in the state, we saw a spike in animal deaths from high nitrate levels in feeds. We don't want a repeat of that."

Many baled and fresh-cut forage crops such as corn, grain, grasses and sorghum harvested during last summer's drought have high nitrate levels, which poses the greatest risk for ruminants such as cows, sheep and goats. Although not as sensitive, horses can also be affected. The issue is becoming more critical as drought conditions

N.C. ranks ninth in agricultural exports

■ State breaks into top 10 for first time

North Carolina is now the ninth-largest state in terms of agricultural export value, according to a recent report by the U.S. Department of Agriculture. North Carolina previously ranked 12th on the list. North Dakota was bumped out of the top 10.

USDA estimates the value of North Carolina's exports at more than $2 billion. Overall, U.S. agricultural exports reached a record $68.7 billion in fiscal 2006, up $6.2 billion from the previous record in 2005.

"I am proud that we have had success in our global marketing strategy," said Agriculture Commissioner Stever Troxler. "Our international marketing specialists have been working hard to find new markets for our farmers, and their efforts are paying off."

North Carolina is the leading tobacco-exporting state, accounting for 38 percent of U.S. exports, and ranks third in poultry exports, behind Arkansas and Georgia. The Tar Heel state is also the fifth-largest exporter of peanuts, sixth-largest exporter of live animals and meat products and the seventh-largest exporter of cottonseed

Food safety

tection Division checks many food items each year, including ready-to-eat products, fresh fruits and vegetables and soft-serve ice cream in restaurants. While we do inspect ice cream dispensers, we do not conduct overall inspections of individual restaurants. That job falls to local health departments.

Food and Drug inspectors collect samples of products from retail stores and at processors and send them to our laboratory for testing. Among the things our staff looks for is the presence of E.coli, salmonella and other harmful microorganisms, pesticide residues, heavy metals, foreign materials and more. We hope the tests turn up nothing, but that isn't always the case.

When we find evidence of these potentially harmful substances, we work with the company involved to determine where the product has been shipped and issue a recall.

From time to time, we will step up our inspection of certain food items if problems are reported in another part of the country, just to be sure we don't have a similar problem here.

Following severe weather events, our inspectors will also canvass areas that experienced flooding or extended power outages to ensure food safety.

In addition, our Meat and Poultry Inspection Division works in cooperation with the U.S. Department of Agriculture to inspect meat processing facilities in the state. A state or federal inspector has to be onsite whenever a processing plant is operating.

Situations like the fish recall again underscore the benefits of buying locally grown commodities.

North Carolina has a number of aquaculture farmers in the state producing tilapia, trout, catfish, hybrid striped bass, crawfish and more. In fact, we are the third largest producer of trout in the country.

This is the prime time of the season for North Carolina fruits and vegetables and I'd encourage you to look for local products wherever you shop.

Our Got to Be NC Agriculture campaign got a plug on national television recently when the "Early Show" on CBS broadcast from downtown Raleigh as part of its "Summer in the City" series. Weatherman Dave Price showed off a display of North Carolina commodities and even tasted some extra-fresh green peppers on air. Later in the broadcast, he drove off in the Big Cart, which the department is using to promote North Carolina products. I hope some of you saw this broadcast, and most importantly I hope the spot translates into increased sales for our farmers.

Remember, when you want the best, it's "Got to Be NC Agriculture."

Bucolic briefs

The Northeast Ag Expo will be held Aug. 2 and 3 at Roberts Brothers Inc. in Shawboro. The event includes crop training on Aug. 2 from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. for extension agents, ag consultants, certified crop advisers and agribusiness representatives involved in troubleshooting corn production problems. In addition, a field day focusing on corn production will be held Aug. 3 from 7:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Farmers interested in attending should contact their local extension office. Professional credits are available.

A group of economic development leaders and grocers is researching the possibility of establishing a food-processing center to serve the needs of small farmers, food entrepreneurs and caterers. Farmers and business people are encouraged to fill out a survey indicating their interest in using a facility of this nature.

A shared-use food-processing center is designed to help small farms and food businesses succeed in value-added food production and marketing.

The study seeks to determine the level of demand from potential users, identify lead agencies or organizations that can manage the project and identify suitable locations for the center's development.

Interested potential users can go to www.orangecountyfarms.org/VASUPintro.asp to fill out the survey. To receive a survey by mail, contact the Orange County Economic Development Commission office at (919) 245-2330 or e-mail Smithson@smithsonmills.com.

Venus flytraps

culture and Consumer Services' Plant Protection Section.

Given that the plant's natural habitat is limited and thousands of acres of open farm and timberland falls to development each year, the concern is warranted.

"Their range has certainly decreased in recent years," Gadd said, adding that the state has only 75 known viable populations of the plant. In fact, in North Carolina the flytrap is found only in Bladen, Brunswick, Carteret, Columbus, Craven, Cumberland, Duplin, Hoke, New Hanover, Onslow and Pender counties. The plant is believed to no longer exist in Lenoir, Jones and Moore counties.

Adding to the concern is the plant's popularity with poachers looking to make a few dollars selling the unusual plants.

More and more frequently, public lands acquired with the goal of plant conservation in mind, have become popular hunting grounds for the flytrap. To discourage this practice, the NCDA&CS and The Nature Conservancy are teaming on a relatively new marking program to identify Venus flytrap plants removed from public lands.

"We are able to use fluorescent orange powder, which doesn't harm the plant or people, to mark the plants," Gadd said. "If inspectors spot the dye in even one plant in a single shipment, the entire shipment can be confiscated."

For the second year in a row, NCDA&CS, The Nature Conservancy and volunteers canvassed sections of the nearly 16,000-acre Green Swamp Preserve and the more than 6,000-acre Boiling Springs Lakes Plant Conservation Preserve in search of the foot-high delicate white flowers that push up through underbrush and pine needles to signal a Venus flytrap plant lies below.

Once spotted, the plants are dusted with the sticky dye that will let inspectors know the plants came from public lands. The dye is not always visible to the naked eye, but can be illuminated later by inspectors using special equipment.

This marking effort is an offshoot of a program started 10 years ago in the mountains of North Carolina that has led to the successful prosecution of ginseng poachers.

With a price of $500 per pound or more for dried wild ginseng root, hunting in national parks such as the Great Smoky Mountains Park in North Carolina had become a big concern for conservationists and park rangers.

Jim Corbin, a plant protection specialist with NCDA&CS came up with the idea and the tools for the marking program. To date, more than 46,000 ginseng plants have been marked. His idea has subsequently been used in 13 states and two foreign countries for a number of other protected plants that are targeted by poachers.

The ginseng marking program has been successful, with more than 80 ginseng poachers being convicted and thousands of illegally harvested roots seized. Poaching activity by repeat offenders is down. In addition, Corbin said population studies in the Great Smoky park show that plant populations that were all but poached out are returning to their original numbers.

As news of the program and charges spreads, Corbin and park officials hope it will further deter poachers from public NCDA&CS Botanist Laura Gadd finds the delicate white bloom of a Venus flytrap plant in an open field. Gadd, NCDA&CS plant protection specialists and volunteers with The Nature Conservancy conducted a two-day marking effort of the flytraps on public lands to try to thwart plant poachers. Below, volunteers armed with supplies hike into the woods in search of the carnivorous plants.

Gadd hopes the Venus flytrap program will be a similar deterrent.

"Venus flytraps are not nearly as lucrative as ginseng, but it's easy to dig a few hundred plants at one time," Gadd said.

When volunteers took to the woods in late June, they found plenty of evidence of fresh digs, where it appeared poachers also took advantage of the blooms to locate plants for collection.

Gadd said while many larger stores that sell Venus flytraps typically buy them from reputable dealers who propagate the plants from seeds or cuttings, the plants can also be found at roadside stands in the state, and the sources of some of these plants may be less clear.

The flytraps are also found on private lands, but diggers must have landowners' permission before removing any plants.

The Venus flytrap thrives in a fire-dependent environment, meaning prescribed burns must be conducted on the land for plants to regenerate. Most public lands are being managed, but some private lands where the flytraps are found are not. This also poses a long-term threat to the plant population.

Gadd said two of the biggest goals of the program are increasing the public's awareness about the need to protect the Venus flytrap's native habitat and discouraging illegal poaching.

"We want people to know we are out there and we have a mechanism in place to be able to detect the dye in the plants at nurseries we inspect," Gadd said. "In the end, it is about ensuring future generations have an opportunity to enjoy this fascinating plant."

NCDA&CS announces recall of imported fish

Testing by state detects antibiotic not approved for use in farm-raised fish

A Chicago company is voluntarily recalling imported Golden Boy brand silver barb fish from Vietnam after tests by the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services found residue of an antibiotic not approved in the United States for use in farm-raised fish.

Lien Hoa Food Corp. is notifying North Carolina retailers who received shipments of the fish to pull the product from seafood cases.

The fish tested positive for a fluoroquinolone, a class of antibiotics used to treat common human infections.

State public health officials said the antibiotics are potentially harmful to children and the fetus in pregnant women if ingested in large enough quantities. In addition, the use of fluoroquinolones in human food might increase the risk of resistance to this class of antibiotics.

"Anyone who bought the fish should not eat it," said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. "Return it to the place of purchase or throw it in the trash."

Department inspectors obtained samples of the fish from an Asian market in North Carolina that was supplied by Lien Hoa Food Corp. They are working to find other retailers in the state that might have received the fish.

"Our inspectors will be checking to make sure this product is pulled from store shelves," Troxler said.

Cecil named Piedmont Triad market manager

Richard F. "Rick" Cecil of Thomasville has been named manager of the Piedmont Triad Farmers Market in Colfax, Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler announced.

Cecil has worked at the market since it opened in 1995 and was its assistant manager for the past 10 years.

"Rick Cecil has the skills and know-how to continue to grow this market," Troxler said. "Under his leadership, it will continue to be a popular place where folks can come and buy great N.C. produce and food."

A Davidson County native, Cecil grew up on a tobacco farm and attended East Carolina University and Davidson County Community College.

Cecil and his wife, Wanda, have been married for 28 years. They have two sons: Sam, 24, and Tom, 19.

The Piedmont Triad Farmers Market is a popular attraction in the Triad, drawing more than 1.5 million visitors in 2006.

The market is located at 2914 Sandy Ridge Road in Colfax, off Exit 208 of Interstate 40. It is open daily from 6 a.m.-6 p.m.

The market is one of five regional farmers markets across the state operated by the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services. The others are in Asheville, Charlotte, Lumberton and Raleigh.

High nitrates

continue across the state with seemingly no relief in sight.

Fermenting silage for a month may greatly decrease nitrate levels. Diluting forage with lower-level nitrate feeds may subdue symptoms if the actual levels of nitrate toxicity are known. If nitrates are too high, the feed should be destroyed. Farmers are encouraged to contact their local extension agents for assistance with diluting rations, the fermenting process or for more information.

Symptoms of nitrate poisoning usually appear quickly. These symptoms range from respiratory distress, weak or rapid heartbeat, below normal body temperature, staggering gait, poor muscle coordination, pupil dilation and bluish membranes around the eyes and nose. High nitrate levels may also cause decreased milk production, decreased weight gain and an increase in stillborn births and abortions. Nitrate levels that reach a toxic level can cause death within two hours of consumption.

Nitrates are often found in baled hay that was recently purchased or hay that was harvested in the field but not previously tested. Baled hay should be probed for accurate results. If harvested, representative samples from each field should be sent in; about 20 samples or a 20 percent representation of each field is adequate. Livestock owners should contact their local veterinarians with questions about management and feeding, as well as advice about sick animals. If any of the symptoms are suspected, farmers are urged to send forage samples to NCDA&CS for nitrates testing, which is free of charge.

"Nitrate testing is on the rise this year and we have seen unusually high levels in hay including non-nitrate accumulators, such as Bermuda grass or fescue, from every part of the state," said Jennifer Godwin, feed administrator for the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services' Food & Drug Protection Division. "Testing is free, quick, easy and the best method of prevention available to farmers during this tough drought season."

Farmers can also submit samples to the Farm Feed Forage Testing Service, which analyzes samples so that rations may be balanced for efficient production. A $10 fee is required for each sample for this additional testing.

Send samples to the Food and Drug Protection Division's Constable Laboratory, 4000 Reedy Creek Rd., Raleigh, NC 27607, or hand-deliver them to the same address. Farmers will be alerted within two working days after receiving the forage if levels are too high. For more information, contact Godwin at (919) 733-7366 or by e-mail at jennifer.godwin@ncmail.net.

Board taking comments on proposed animal euthanasia rules until Aug. 31

The North Carolina Board of Agriculture is accepting written comments from the public about proposed rules governing euthanasia at animal shelters until Aug. 31.

N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services veterinarians spent more than a year developing the rules, which are designed to ensure animals are euthanized as humanely as possible.

The rules would set standards for equipment and training that shelters must meet if they euthanize animals.

Send written comments to David McLeod, N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services, 1001 Mail Service Center, Raleigh, NC 27699-1001. For information or to download a copy of the rules, go online to www.ncagr.com/vet/aws/euthanasiarules.htm.

The board held a public hearing on the rules in July and will vote on them in September.

Exports

International marketing specialists for the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services have been working with commodity groups across the state to increase opportunities for farmers. Marketing specialists work throughout Asia, Europe and the Americas to open up new markets. For example, through a cooperative effort with the N.C. SweetPotato Commission, marketing specialists have found a rapidly growing market for sweet potatoes in Europe. Asia has proven to be a strong market for cotton seed, poultry and other commodities. Marketing specialists are using federal funding to develop new opportunities in the Middle East, the Caribbean and across the Americas with commodities such as eggs, pork, peanuts and forestry products, plus various value-added items.

The full USDA report can be found at www.ers.usda.gov/Data/StateExports/.

Farmers are reminded about the NCDA&CS Hay Alert Web site at www.ncagr.com/HayAlert/

The North Carolina Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services has created this site in an effort to bring together farmers in need of hay with those that have hay for sale. If farmers have hay for sale or need hay, they can list their names, addresses and other pertinent information by filling out the appropriate form on the Web site. It is the responsibility of the buyers and sellers to negotiate sales.

Legislators take a milk break

Rep. David Lewis (Harnett County) participates in the milk-chugging contest at the legislature.

The Boys and Girls Homes of North Carolina Inc. and the N.C. Dairy Stabilization and Growth Strategic Plan benefited from a legislative milk-chugging contest held recently at the N.C. General Assembly in Raleigh. In a race that went down to the final drop, the team of House members won by four seconds over the Senate team.

The House All-Stars received $300 for the Boys and Girls Homes of North Carolina Inc. The Senate Chuggers received $200 for the development of a N.C. Dairy Stabilization and Growth Strategic Plan.

Rep. Dewey Hill of Columbus County and Sen. Charlie Albertson of Duplin County, who chair the General Assembly's agriculture committees, led their three-person teams in competition. Joining Hill were Reps. David Lewis of Harnett County and Arthur Williams of Beaufort County. Albertson teamed with Sens. Stan Bingham of Davidson County and Joe Sam Queen of Haywood County.
