The event features more than 500 manufacturers of farm equipment, supplies and services.

Activities will be held in Dorton Arena, the Graham Building, the Scott Building, the Exposition Center, the Hunt Horse Complex and the grounds.

Hours are 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. daily and admission is free. Go to www.southernfarmshow.com for more, or call (800) 849-0248.

Battling bedbugs? Make sure you use a licensed pest management company

In the past decade, bedbugs have made a comeback across the U.S. and in North Carolina. There are several reasons for this resurgence, including an increase in international travel and commerce, high tenant turnover in apartments, and changes in pesticide use and insecticide resistance.

Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler advises homeowners and business owners to be aware that the effective treatment of a bedbug infestation can be costly, and they should be wary of promises of low-cost remedies.

"Bedbugs generally cannot be controlled effectively with do-it-yourself measures," Troxler said. "And many times they can't be effectively controlled with just a single visit by a pest management professional. It's important for consumers to be careful in choosing a pest management company to address bedbug problems."

Troxler offers the following advice to consumers:

- Make sure your pest management professional is licensed. In North Carolina, a current license issued by the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services is required of anyone who performs structural pest control work. Even if someone makes inspections for bedbugs – or offers non-chemical treatment methods such as heat, steam or freezing – he still must be licensed.

- Get an inspection. Any effective bedbug control strategy should start with a careful, thorough inspection by a licensed pest management professional of all known and suspected spots that may harbor the bugs. As bedbugs are discovered, the pest management professional will develop a treatment and control strategy with the customer depending on the extent of the infestation. Licensed pest management professionals have been trained and tested and have access to the latest information about effective tools for controlling bedbugs.

The licensed professional is better prepared to assist consumers in the proper ways of dealing with bedbug problems or other structural pest issues.

- Make sure your pest management company is insured. In North Carolina, licensed pest management professionals are required to carry general liability insurance that protects both the consumer and the pest control operator if any problem arises with the pesticide or application method used to deal with bedbugs or other pests.

Troxler said the department recently investigated situations where pesticides intended only for outdoor use had been misapplied inside homes, as well as situations in which pesticides had been improperly used or applied at greater rates than the label allows. While controlling bedbugs is challenging, consumers should never use, or allow anyone else to use, a

Annual Ag Forum slated for Feb. 3 at Fairgrounds

The sixth annual Ag Development Forum will be held Feb. 3 in the Holshouser Building at the State Fairgrounds. The event, which runs from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., is free.

Matt Martin, senior vice president of the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond's Charlotte branch, will be the keynote speaker. His remarks will focus on monetary policy and its effect on agriculture in early 2011.

The forum will also feature an industry roundtable discussing ag input costs.

"This will be a great opportunity to come learn more about economic factors affecting farmers," said

Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. "This is going to be a critical year to stay informed because of ongoing economic concerns in North Carolina, the United States and even globally. I encourage farmers, commodity groups and agribusiness leaders to join us Feb. 3."

Troxler will also present his annual State of Agriculture address, outlining issues and concerns for the year ahead.

The forum is being held in conjunction with the Southern Farm Show.

Participants are asked to register at www.ncagr.gov/agforum/.

Like many businesses, our Agronomic Services Lab, which processes soil samples, has a peak season. That season is now.

In late fall and into the winter months, soil samples pour into the lab to be tested. This fall has been busier than normal. In fact, in November our lab processed 12 percent more samples than for the same time period in 2009.

Stacks of gray cardboard sample boxes line the walls, waiting their turn to be processed. The lab results from those tests will ultimately provide farmers and homeowners with fertilizer and lime recommendations for the upcoming growing season. This is a valuable service as it helps farmers save money by using only the amount of fertilizer needed for optimal growth, and it protects the environment by keeping excess nutrients from being applied unnecessarily.

With so many samples coming into the lab at once, residents often experience delays this time of year in getting test results. At press time, the average turnaround time for processing samples was five to six weeks.

This month, the laboratory is bringing a new piece of equipment online to help reduce the wait time. This equipment is expected to boost the lab's processing capacity to more than 3,200 soil samples a day. That's about 400 more samples per day from its current capacity. I expect this will be welcomed news for many people who have sent in samples.

Lime and fertilizer recommendations are critical for planning purposes, but growers still have time to use the testing services before needing to prep fields for the 2011 crop season.

I am proud of the soil testing services we provide, but I am also proud that the information farmers receive from these tests are crop- and area-specific and that

Two elected to board of plant conservation group

Jean Woods of Brevard and Dale Batchelor of Raleigh have been elected to the board of Friends of Plant Conservation.

The group provides support to the Plant Conservation Program of the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services.

Woods and Batchelor were elected to the board at the group's annual meeting at the N.C. Aquarium at Fort Fisher.

pesticide indoors that is intended for outdoor use, he said.

"Using the wrong pesticide – or using the correct pesticide incorrectly – to treat for bedbugs can make you, your family and your pets sick," Troxler said. "It can also make your home unsafe to live in – and may not solve the bedbug problem. If you do try treating the problem yourself, always read the label thoroughly before applying any chemical inside or around your home."

Homeowners and business owners can verify a company's license by checking the employee's identification card issued by the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services Structural Pest Control and Pesticides Division. To find a list of licensees, log on to the division's website at www.ncagr.gov/str-pest/, or call (919) 733-6100.

Troxler has become increasingly concerned about the resurgence of bedbugs and the scarcity of effective treatments. Heat treatments and fumigations performed by licensed pest management professionals can be effective methods for managing bedbugs, but they do not provide residual control of the pests. In September, Troxler urged the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to get involved in finding a solution.

Troxler appoints Greensboro resident to Plant Conservation Board

Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler recently appointed Katherine K. Schlosser of Greensboro to the N.C. Plant Conservation Board.

Schlosser fills an unexpired term as an at-large member of the board. Her term runs through September 2012.

"Kathy Schlosser brings a wealth of knowledge and expertise to the N.C. Plant Conservation Board," Troxler said. "In addition to her educational background, her volunteer experience related to plant conservation and native plants will serve her well in this role."

Schlosser earned a bachelor's degree in psychology and master's degree in human relations and communications from the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

Following her retirement as a communications and diversity training consultant, she has volunteered with several organizations, including the Friends of Sauratown Mountains, N.C. Native Plant Society, Herb Society of America, N.C. Herb Society and Friends of Plant Conservation. She has edited several organizational publications and is a frequent contributor to newspapers and other periodicals on subjects related to native plants. She received the Foster Award for Excellence in Herbal Literature.

N.C. Dept. of Agriculture & Consumer Services gets federal grants to protect food, animal feed North Carolina's efforts to ensure the safety of food, animal feed and pet food are getting a financial boost from three federal grants.

The N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services received a $211,000 grant from the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Food Safety and Inspection Service to expand testing for harmful foodborne bacteria such as E. coli O157:H7, Salmonella and Listeria monocytogenes. The grant is renewable for up to four additional years if funds are available.

"Our Food and Drug Protection Division conducts numerous inspections and performs a variety of food tests with support from the federal government," said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. "These funds will allow us to increase our capacity for food testing."

The department also received a five-year, $1.25 million grant from the U.S. Food and Drug Administration to support efforts to prevent bovine spongiform encephalopathy in North Carolina livestock. BSE, also known as mad cow disease, is a degenerative brain illness affecting cattle and other ruminant animals.

"The grant will help our Food and Drug Protection Division increase its ability to inspect companies involved in the manufacture and distribution of animal feed, as well as operations that feed ruminant animals," Troxler said.

"These funds also will support our laboratory testing program and activities aimed at educating industry and the public about the ruminant feed ban and other feed safety regulations."

A third grant, worth $50,000, is from FDA's Center for Veterinary Medicine to support testing of pet food for pathogens. North Carolina is one of five states participating in this program.

Plant Conservation Board in 1979 to protect and conserve the state's threatened and endangered plants and species of special concern.

These seven-member board's key responsibilities include establishing and maintaining the lists of endangered, threatened and special-concern plants, implementing regulations related to the sale or collection of listed plants and implementing plant conservation programs. Four members are appointed by the governor and three by the agriculture commissioner.
