LXXXVII - No. 1

January 2012

Raleigh, N.C.

On the Horizon

The 2012 Ag Development Forum will take place Thursday, Feb. 2, from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. in the Holshouser Building at the State Fairgrounds in Raleigh. The agenda will include a discussion of farm safety and other current topics in agriculture. Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler also will deliver his annual State of Agriculture address.

Admission is free, but registration is encouraged. More information will be added online at www.ncagr.gov/agforum.

The Southern Farm Show will be held Feb. 1-3 at the State Fairgrounds in Raleigh. More than 300 vendors and exhibitors will have products and equipment on display.

Admission and parking are free. For more information, go to www.southernshows.com/sfs/

Soil and water conservation celebrates 75 years

Conservation programs have evolved; local, state, federal partnership poised to face future challenges

North Carolina celebrates 75 years of soil and water conservation in 2012. The long-term success of conservation efforts remains linked to the unique local, state and federal partnership.

As Dick Fowler, executive director of the N.C. Association of Soil and Water Conservation Districts puts it: "Having all these partners means there are more tools in the soil and water conservation toolbox to help landowners." Technical assistance, educational outreach and cost-share programs and are all hallmarks of the soil and water conservation partnership in North Carolina.

There are 96 conservation districts statewide, supported by county governments, the USDA Natural Resources Conservation Service, the Division of Soil and Water Conservation, the Soil and Water Conservation Commission, the N.C. Association of Soil and Water Conservation Districts and the N.C. Foundation for Soil and Water Conservation.

Soil and water conservation efforts themselves have evolved as communities and needs have changed. For example, when Dr. Hugh Hammond Bennett, the father of soil conservation, began taking his message across the country, the nation was in the midst of the Dust Bowl with top soil being blown away with great regularity and soil being washed away whenever heavy rains came. Today, soil and water conservation districts serve the needs of rural and urban areas alike, taking the lessons learned through years of agricultural conservation efforts and applying them as well to urban challenges of storm water run-off, sedimentation and nutrient management.

When Bennett began his crusades of conservation, he held a simple belief that our society must put every acre of land to its best use and treat every acre according to its needs. He also believed that conservation should be voluntary and incentive-based, not regulatory. Those philosophies remain at the foundation of the ongoing soil and water conservation efforts.

In an era when most people farmed, conservation districts worked mainly with landowners and farmers. Today, programs are also geared to urban and residential property owners. Soil and water conservation districts are working with homeowners association to better manage runoff. They are looking for opportunities for energy credits for farms and are participating in projects where methane is being

Hugh Hammond Bennett

Hugh Hammond Bennett, a native of Anson County, received many awards and honors for his lifetime dedication to protecting and conserving soil and water resources for future generations. In Bennett's time, he observed the effects of the Dust Bowl on farmland and believed the farming practices of the day, combined with geographic features of the land, were contributing to the severe soil erosion being seen across the plains.

Bennett's tireless efforts led to the creation of the federal government's Soil Erosion Service in 1933. Bennett served as director of that agency until he retired in 1951. SES was reorganized under the U.S. Department of Agriculture and renamed the Soil Conservation Service in 1935. Today, the organization is known as the Natural Resources Conservation Service.

In 1937, with encouragement from Bennett, President Franklin Roosevelt sent legislation to the nation's governors urging them to establish soil conservation districts. On Aug. 4, 1937, the Brown Creek Soil Conservation District in North Carolina became the first district in the country. Districts were initially created around bodies of water, streams, creeks or watersheds. This district included Anson County, Hammond's birthplace.

Bennett's ongoing work also resulted in funding for North Carolina leads the country or is near the top in many areas of agriculture, which is something I am very proud of. Tobacco, sweet potatoes, poultry and egg cash receipts, hogs, Christmas tree cash receipts, trout sold and turkeys are just a few of our nation-leading commodities. Even as our state has added new industries, it has continued to build on its agricultural roots.

With such rich ties to the soil, it seems only fitting that one of the lands' most passionate promoters was from North Carolina. Hugh Hammond Bennett of Anson County was a true pioneer in to soil and water conservation. In the 1930s, he toured the country talking about soil and water conservation efforts with anyone who would listen. His message was anything but popular, but his experience and gut told him he needed to continue spreading that message if farmers in the future were going to have any chance of producing crops. Bennett believed that our society must put every acre of land to its best use and treat every acre according to its needs.

He served in the highest levels of government, but worked alongside farmers whenever he was demonstrating soil conservation techniques and encouraged his staff to do so as well – showing versus telling farmers the best practices for the soil.

From his efforts a movement began, a movement that we are celebrating this year – the 75th anniversary of Soil and Water Conservation. In fact, the very first soil and water conservation district in the country was established in North Carolina in 1937 in Bennett's home county. Bennett encouraged President Franklin Roosevelt to send legislation to the nation's governors urging them to establish soil conservation districts.

To highlight the anniversary, several articles in this issue of the Agricultural Review will focus on soil and water conservation, some of its programs and how the districts help farmers and communities manage their natural resources. As many of you may remember, the legislature transferred the Division of Soil and Water Conservation to my department this year.

I have been to numerous

Bucolic briefs

The Southern/National Draft Horse Pull and Coon Mule Jump event will be held Feb. 3 at 6 p.m. in the Hunt Horse Complex at the State Fairgrounds. The show will be held in conjunction with the Southern Farm Show. Twenty teams of giant draft horses will compete for bragging rights and prize money as they pull to see who can move the most weight on a weighted sled. The competition is divided into two categories – heavyweights (above 3,300 pounds) and lightweights (less than 3,300 pounds). Teams can typically pull up to twice their weight. In the Coon Mule Jump, mules will attempt to clear the highest height from a stationary position. Some mules have been known to clear 6 feet. Tickets are $8 in advance or $10 at the door. Children under 6 are admitted free with a paying adult. For more, contact Calvin Davis at 919-732-7542 or Rob Hall at 336-503-7183.

A regional N.C. Cooperative Extension conference titled “Putting Your Farmland to Work: Planning, Production, Marketing and More!” will be held Feb. 3 from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Program topics include getting started, marketing, vegetable production, small fruit production, eggs and poultry, farm business planning and for safety for small farmers. The cost is $25, and the deadline to register is Jan. 25. Contact Paul McKenzie, agent with Warren/Vance counties, 252-257-3640 for more information.

The Davidson County N.C. Cooperative Extension Office invites prospective, beginning and transitioning farmers to attend the 2012 Piedmont Farm School, a seven-month program designed to provide training in production practices and business planning to help people operate successful, small-scale, sustainable farms. The program will start Feb. 14 and wraps up in October. The group will meet one evening for business training and on another day for a field trip to a local farm. Field trip topics include whole farm planning, livestock basics, fruits, vegetables, specialty crops, agritourism and marketing. The cost if registered before Dec. 16 is $150 for one person, $200 for two people or $250 for families of three or more. There is an additional $25 fee for anyone registering between Dec. 16 and Jan. 20. For more information, contact Leslie Vinesett at 336-242-2085 or Mary Helen Ferguson at 336-318-6000.

USDA to establish numerous soil erosion experiment stations, where staff could demonstrate techniques to farmers, but also continue to experiment and learn about different techniques to control soil erosion.

Highlights

- Born in Anson County April 15, 1881.
- Often referred to as the “Father of Soil Conservation.”
- Was graduated from the University of North Carolina in 1903 with a degree in soil chemistry.
- First job was as a soil surveyor with the U.S. Department of Agriculture, where he conducted soil studies
- Co-writer of “Soil Erosion: A National Menace” in 1928.
- Charter inductee in USDA Hall of Heroes in 2000; other charter inductees were George Washington Carver, former U.S. Senator Bob Dole and Smokey Bear.
- Inducted in the N.C. Agricultural Hall of Fame in 1967.
- Bennett’s papers are housed in the Southern Historical Collection of Wilson Library at UNC-Chapel Hill.

captured from swine waste lagoons and used for energy. Districts are identifying natural resource concerns in their communities and are working with landowners and farmers to meet their conservation goals. The programs and resource assistance are as unique as the communities they serve.

Conservation education is still a big component of efforts today. Sandra Weitzel, with the state division of soil and water conservation, said educational outreach begins with third-grade students, continues with middle and high school students and also involves adults.

Starting educational efforts early is important, Weitzel said. “It is important for them to understand that they need to be stewards and that they have a responsibility to the world around them. For some of kids in the urban city, their feet never touch dirt. It is important they realize they live in a bigger world.”

There are a variety of educational conservation awareness opportunities for students, including poster and essay contests, class outings at parks, environmental field days, an annual week-long Resource Conservation Workshop at N.C. State University, and Envirothon, a national competition geared to middle and high schoolers that focus on five key topics of conservation.

It is hard to imagine the immense outreach task Bennett faced. In the beginning, he was a voice of one. Through his efforts and as his message spread, that voice of one grew to what today carries the weight of 3,000 district officials across the country, Fowler said.

Providing technical assistance and expertise has been one of the key principles since the beginning of conservation efforts, and that is one of the strengths of the partnership between local, state and federal officials.

“For two-thirds of the time conservation districts have been in existence, they have been effective in offering technical assistance that helps a landowner’s operation and also benefits the public,” Fowler said.

Patricia Harris, director of the state Division of Soil and Water Conservation, sees districts remaining focused on the future. Water quantity will likely be a key natural resource concern as we begin the next 75 years of conservation work, she said. The Agricultural Water Resources Assistance Program, or AgWRAP, will target efforts and resources towards increasing ag water capacity by constructing more farm ponds and renovating older ponds and improving water-use efficiency.

meetings since the transfer, welcoming staff to the department and pledging our continued support of conservation programs.

I believe soil conservation is just as important and relevant today as it was during Bennett’s time. Arguably, he had a tougher message to sell, given that few farmers had ever considered soil conservation, but we need to continue to protect our best, most fertile farmland.

That is especially true as we see more and more farm and timber land being converted to shopping centers and subdivisions. We are going to need to produce even more on lands that remain in production agriculture in the future. Preventing erosion and topsoil loss will be critical to these lands remaining their most productive.

As North Carolinians, we should all be proud that soil and water conservation got its start in the state. North Carolina has a rich history of visionary leadership, and the creation of the Soil and Water Conservation Program is a great example of forward-thinking change.

As our state has changed, so too has the work of soil and water districts and supporting partners. Soil and water is working to address challenges in urban areas and on non-agricultural lands as well as farmland. By applying the lessons learned from soil and water conservation to non-agricultural lands, we are also addressing the challenges of urbanized areas with regards to storm water issues, sedimentation and nutrient management.

As we begin the next 75 years, we are still looking forward. I believe water quantity will be an increasingly important issue to address. We have been working on a new program – Agricultural Water Resources Assistance Program, known as AgWRAP– that will look at increasing agricultural water storage capacities in the state. Previous periods of drought have shown us that our farmers will need access to water to be able to grow crops and raise livestock. AgWRAP will look at ways to achieve this objective.

Efforts are under way in North Carolina to honor and recognize Bennett’s lifetime of service to farmers. In 2010, the N.C. Friends of Agriculture Foundation was formed, in part, to help raise money to build a museum dedicated to North Carolina’s agricultural history. We hope to build the museum at the State Fairgrounds, where we can incorporate the museum into annual fair events highlighting North Carolina agriculture.

Fittingly, Bennett’s work and contributions to soil and water conservation will be an important part of the museum.

If you or your family would like to become a “Friend of Agriculture,” we would welcome your support. To learn more the foundation, go to www.ncfriendsofagriculture.org.

Online donations can be made through this secure website, or you can mail it to The N.C. Agricultural Foundation Inc., Campus Box 7645, N.C. State University, Raleigh, NC 27695-7645. Checks should be made payable to N.C. Friends of Agriculture Fund.

It is going to take some time to reach our goal, but with the support of our farmers and agribusinesses, I know this museum will become a reality.
