Farm City Week celebrated in November

November is typically a time when we pause to give thanks for the many blessings we have in life. It also is a time to be reminded of the connection between farms and the foods we enjoy during National Farm-City Week.

Many communities across the state hold special events in recognition of the contributions of their agricultural communities.

Agriculture and agribusiness is North Carolina's leading industry at $84 billion, and it employs more than 686,000 people.

While agriculture and agribusiness is good for our economy, it also provides us with food, fiber and fuel.

Be sure to thank a farmer this November.

Flooding from Hurricane Matthew devastates Eastern North Carolina

Commissioner Troxler

For too many of our farmers in Eastern North Carolina, fall has changed from one of optimism to one of loss. First Tropical Storm Hermine brushed the northeastern corner of the state, causing significant flooding and problems for farmers. Behind it came the remnants of Tropical Storm Julia, which blanketed much of Eastern North Carolina. The final insult was from Hurricane Matthew with its uncertain path, but sweeping reach and catastrophic flooding.

At press time, we are in the midst of the aftermath of Hurricane Matthew. We do not have any damage estimates, but we are continuing to assess damage and get in field reports on ag losses and crop conditions. Several rivers have not even crested yet, as the floodwaters continue to move downstream. So we anticipate more losses and more problems for agriculture.

In surveying some of the hardest-hit areas of southeastern North Carolina by air, I can only say I have never seen anything like this. I have seen a lot of storm damage as Commissioner of Agriculture, but this is catastrophic. Houses and barns were underwater, many roads washed away, and fields and crops submerged.

Flooded and damaged roads were creating challenges in moving feed and water to livestock operations, moving animals to market and moving fuel for generators.

The magnitude of the damage is mind boggling. Basically, it looked like a lake from Smithfield to the coast.

Lots of crops were still in the field when the heavy rains hit our state. Farmers had been working as hard they could to harvest as much as they could before the wet weather rolled in. But there is only so much that can be done in the days leading up to a storm of this severity and scope.

Peanuts, cotton, soybeans and sweet potatoes were among the crops still in the fields. We also are concerned about livestock and poultry in flooded areas.

Most in farming know that just because a crop is harvested doesn't mean it is out of trouble. Loss of power to tobacco curing barns and grain bins can lead to loss, as can flooded storage facilities.

Many people will remember Hurricane Floyd and the damage it caused in Eastern North Carolina. It was referred to as a

Momeyer farmer improves organic tobacco crop with agronomic advice

When the tobacco buyout happened in 2004, Kelvin Bass took the opportunity to move away from tobacco production and focus on two enterprises he had started earlier: pick-your-own strawberries in 1983, and retail nursery and floriculture production in 1986. He expanded the garden center to sell more plants near Momeyer, in Nash County, thinking that was the end of his run with tobacco.

Bass, who holds a degree in biological and ag engineering from N.C. State University, has never shied away from trying something new, whether it was a new crop or a different production technique. He had worked with Cooperative Extension in the past on test crops, and he was a regular user of the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services' agronomic services.

"Some things work and some things don't," Bass said, mentioning a Christmas tree experiment that was not especially successful. "It's easy to get stuck on the tried and true, but we were small enough to try some different things."

Tobacco had been good to his family, but he figured the timing was right to make the transition. The nursery business grew, even adding an ice cream shop, but then the economic downturn of 2008 slowed business. Bass once again needed to figure out something to add to his farm to help financially.

While he thought he was through with tobacco, he discovered there was growing demand for organic tobacco, and the crop was commanding a premium price. As he looked at the numbers, he believed there was an opportunity for organic tobacco to add to his bottom line.

Some of his 350 acres of farmland had already been out of production for a couple of years, allowing him to obtain organic certification more quickly. Generally, fields cannot have had any pesticides used on them for three years in order to become certified organic.

"I had land just laying for two years, and we just kinda backed into the organic market," Bass said.

As a third-generation tobacco grower, Bass figured he had the experience and know-how to produce a crop from seed to harvest. So some of his greenhouses returned to producing tobacco transplants, something he had done with his conventional tobacco crop.

And that is when he discovered one of the many challenges of organic production. Some of the transplants were slow to grow, and growth was inconsistent in part because of the slow-release nutrients he needed to use for organic production.

"Last year, I tried this and I tried that, and I think some of them were actually working against each other," he said. He ended up having to buy transplants, which was costlier.

Hoping for better results this year, Bass consulted with

Cleveland County book to raise funds for farmland preservation

One North Carolina county is using the past to help preserve farming for the future.

“Cleveland County Agriculture” is a new book that features nearly 200 black-and-white farming photos from the county, and documents how agriculture has changed over the decades. Proceeds from the book will raise funds for the Cleveland County Farmland Preservation Program, a program that creates awareness of agriculture and seeks to preserve farms.

The book will be sold at the Foothills Farmers’ Market in Shelby and at the USDA office at 844 Wallace Grove Drive. It also can be ordered online at ArcadiaPress.com. The price is $21.99.

The book came about after the 2014 discovery of a box of black-and-white photos from the 1940s through the 1960s. Many photos showed how farmers were trying to prevent erosion, such as building terraces with mules and drag pans.

“We thought it was such a waste that these photos were sitting in the back of the storage room and nobody could see them,” said Stephen Bishop, soil conservationist for the district. “So we contacted a publishing company about creating a book to benefit farmland preservation.”

Arcadia Publishing liked the idea and told Bishop they would need 200 photos to create the book, essentially needing to double the amount the District had. It took about a year to find enough additional photos. Bishops says a lot of local residents brought in photos and told stories about growing up on the farm, and he tried to document those stories, as well. Other old photos were found at the local cooperative extension office and archives of Gardner-Webb University.

Cleveland County has a rich agricultural history, frequently leading the state in cotton production from the 1930s to the 1950s. The county later became a leader in dairy production, with nearly 1,000 farms reporting milk sales in 1954.

“A lot has changed,” Bishop said. “For the first time in the recorded history of the county, not a single stalk of cotton was grown here in 2016, and we are now down to three dairies.”

Poultry, soybeans and grain, and beef cattle are the three biggest sectors of agriculture in the county today. Cleveland County still generates $120 million in agricultural sales each year, nearly double any surrounding county.

Bucolic briefs

As a way to help farmers and agricultural workers stay safe at work, the N.C. Department of Labor offers safety videos on a variety of topics through its YouTube channel. Video topics include: preventing green tobacco sickness, hazard communication, tobacco harvester safety, heat stress, migrant housing requirements, forklift safety, and information about the NCDOL’s Gold Star Growers program. The videos are in English and Spanish to increase understanding of safety hazards and preventing accidents. To learn more about the NCDOL and the Agricultural Safety and Health Bureau, go to www.nclabor.com or call 1-800-NC-LABOR (800-625-2267). NCDOL is also on Facebook and Twitter (@NCDOL).

Beekeepers with bees for rent and growers interested in bee pollination services can post their information on the BeeLinked website at www.ncagr.com/beelinked. The site is hosted by the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services and the N.C. State University Apiculture Program. Anyone interested in listing their information can do so by filling out an online Submit Your Ad form on the BeeLinked page or by contacting NCDA&CS at 919-233-8214 or by email at NCHoneybee@ncagr.gov or call NCSU at 919-515-1660. The NCDA&CS Plant Industry Division regulates the movement of agricultural or related items capable of spreading harmful insects, diseases, and other pests. Beekeepers participating in this program will be required to comply with all honey and bee industry regulations.

Contest winners announced from the Mountain State Fair

The N.C. Mountain State Fair announced winners in both its Dutch oven cook-off and sweet-potato cooking contests

The second-annual Dutch oven cook-off featured adult and youth competitors in a live cooking event in the fair's expanded Heritage Walk area. The event was sponsored by the Mast General Store and the Lodge cookware company. Adult teams were given two-and-a-half hours to prepare an entrée, bread and dessert from scratch using a Dutch oven. Youth teams had to prepare a dessert from scratch.

Barbara Mosley of Swain County won the adult category, earning an enamel Dutch oven and $100 Mast General Store gift card. In the youth category, Abigail Young took top honors. The win earned the Buncombe County resident a $75 Mast General Store gift card and a cast iron Dutch oven.

The N.C. SweetPotato Commission sponsored the "52 Ways to Love Sweet Potatoes" cooking contest. Susie Zuerner of Buncombe County took top honors with her "Sweet Potato Breakfast Surprise" recipe. The dish earned her $250 and a blue ribbon. In second place, Justin Pegg of Buncombe County earned $175 for his "Fully Loaded Sweet Potato Skins" recipe. Sharon Gates of Buncombe County placed third and earned $125 for her recipe, "Toasted Sweet Potato Lasagna." An honorable mention also was awarded to Connie Pegg. Her "Super Simple Sweet Potato Snack Dip" recipe earned the Buncombe County resident $75.

Following is Zuerner's recipe:

Sweet Potato Breakfast Surprise

3 tablespoons coconut oil
6 cups julienned sweet potatoes
1 pound ground sausage, scrambled
6 strips bacon
1 small red onion, chopped
3 cloves garlic, chopped
8 eggs, beaten with dash of salt and pepper
14-ounce can diced garlic tomatoes, drained
Salt and pepper to taste

In large non-stick skillet, heat coconut oil. Add sweet potatoes and cook until done. Once crispy, remove from skillet, place in 8-10 inch bowl and set aside. In same skillet, brown sausage, bacon, onion and garlic. Once meat is browned, remove all ingredients from skillet. Crumble bacon. Wipe excess grease from pan with paper towel, then add eggs and tomatoes. Cook over medium heat until eggs are done. Pour egg and meat mixtures into sweet potato bowl. Turn bowl with contents over onto plate.

Poultry & Supplies For Sale

Highly pathogenic avian influenza alert

In 2015, HPAI was found in the wildfowl population in the United States, representing a risk for poultry owners. At this time no cases have been found in North Carolina.

Poultry owners are encouraged, however, to watch their birds for any signs of illness and to contact a veterinarian if they find sick birds.

Growers can also contact one of four NCDA&CS regional veterinary diagnostic labs for more information. Go to www.ncagr.gov/vet/ncvdl/VetLabFacilitiesDirectory.html for contact information.

As this disease can spread by infected wildfowl, it is important to eliminate opportunities for your birds to come in contact with wild birds.

POULTRY & SUPPLIES

Owners are also urged to be extra mindful of biosecurity measures to prevent the spread of this disease.

This includes quarantining any new poultry additions from your existing flock for two to three weeks to observe for signs of sickness, have a dedicated pair of shoes and clothing for working with birds that stay on your property, be mindful if driving onto property with poultry as the disease can spread by vehicles. More information about HPAI can be found at www.ncagr.gov/avianflu.

Organic tobacco

Mike Wilder, an NCDA&CS regional agronomist who works with growers in Edgecombe, Franklin, Halifax, Nash, Northampton, Vance and Warren counties, to see if they could get better results.

And so began a learning process for both grower and agronomist, a process they have worked through together for improved success.

Wilder convinced Bass to do weekly solution sampling to monitor nutrient levels. That allowed them to make adjustments on a regular basis as the plants grew. "In the end, he grew out a good crop," Wilder said.

"For conventional tobacco, we've got the recommendations down pretty good," said Michelle McGinnis, who oversees the 13 regional agronomists in the state. "With organic tobacco, the fertilizers are a lot different and the alkalinity is very high, and growers can't use traditional means to balance that."

Because organic production of tobacco is a newer area, there hadn't been any real tried-and-true scientific recommendations developed. That's one reason Wilder recommended steady solution testing. By regularly testing the water in the float beds, Wilder and Bass would have more information on nutrient levels at different stages of growth and could work to balance the nutrient levels along the way to optimize growth. They were also able to assess alkalinity levels at different stages and how the plants responded.

"I hope, with this, we can eliminate trial and error. Before, we were just shooting in the dark," Bass said.

At one point, it seemed like the growth of the transplants just stalled. "After two basically failures in a row, I was getting frustrated when it seemed the transplants were just sitting, but then they came on, and it was amazing how quickly they recovered," Bass said.

The proof was in the better quality transplants this season, enough for the 70 acres of tobacco he grew.

Researchers at N.C. State University are now working on a project at the Central Crops Research Station in Clayton that is focused on nutrient recommendations for organic float bed transplant production. McGinnis said she is hopeful the research work, coupled with the observations Wilder and Bass have made this season, will help agronomists develop better recommendations to offer organic growers in the future.

"This is a fairly new production system that we have been looking at the last couple of years. We are trying to fine-tune for recommendations, and we are learning more by working with growers like Kelvin Bass who are willing to try some new things," McGinnis said.

Bass was happy with this year's results. He said one take away from this year's transplant process is "that we will probably start everything earlier in the greenhouse next year, because organic fertilizers are slower."

500-year flood, something many of us expected we would only see once in a lifetime. I am not sure how this hurricane will go down in history, but I expect the agriculture community will be talking about it for a long, long time.

As a farmer, I know it is difficult to work all season, get to harvest time, just to see the fruits of your labor rotting in the field, blown away or lost to power outages. We all know it's a part of the risk of farming, but it is still like a hard blow to the gut.

When we have challenges in our community, we typically see a lot of neighbors helping neighbors. From what I can see following Hurricane Matthew, there are a lot of neighbors in the same boat. We are going to need outside help. We are working closely with our federal partners on assistance for farmers.

We will be continuing to assess agricultural damage and assist farmers and agribusiness however we can. I will update readers in the December issue. Please keep our farm community and Eastern North Carolina in your prayers. Please visit our website, www.ncagr.gov to find up-to-date information.
