Mountain State Fair wraps up

The 17th Annual N.C. Mountain State Fair ended its 10-day run with a near-record attendance of 185,323, thanks in part to nine days of nice weather. That number was just shy of the record of 187,819 set in 2007.

Three single-day attendance records were set during the Fair, and a new record of 15,000 pounds of food was collected on Ingles Day for the MANNA Food Bank.

"We had a great fair, and tremendous support and participation by western N.C. residents and visitors," said Fair Manager Matt Buchanan. "People seemed to have a good time, and we got a lot of positive feedback from visitors."

Two longtime livestock supporters were the first to be inducted into the N.C. Mountain State Fair Livestock Hall of Fame. Barbara Worley and Robert "Burder" Reeves, both of Leicester, were posthumously honored for

It's time to celebrate what's great at the N.C. State Fair Oct. 14-24

The N.C. State Fairgrounds will come alive Oct. 14-24 with the great exhibits, rides and attractions fairgoers have come to expect from the annual fall event.

On Thursday, Oct. 14, the Fair will open at 3 p.m. for Preview Day. Preview Day includes a discounted gate admission, and Powers Great American Midway will offer a $25 Preview Day Ride Wrist Band for unlimited rides from 3:30 p.m. to midnight.

A new exhibit, Seed Survivor, is an educational tent featuring interactive games and displays that teach children how sunlight, water and nutrients work together in plant growth. Visitors will be able to plant a sunflower seed and take it home. This exhibit will be located near the Green NC tent at Gate 12.

Adults will enjoy improving their green thumbs with an expanded list of gardening demonstrations in the Flower and Garden Show. More than 90 demonstrations will be held, with experts offering advice on such topics as pumpkin carving and flower arrangement. A variety of bamboo structures, built by landscape design students at N.C. State University, will also be on display in the Flower and Garden Show area.

At the grandstand, Keith King and his group of high-flying BMX and motocross bikers return in the King Action Sports Stunt Show Monday, Oct. 18, to Sunday, Oct. 24. In addition to their array of flatland and ramp tricks, the performers will partner with the Susan G. Komen Foundation for a special cancer-survivor show on Saturday, Oct. 23. The grandstand will also host the Tractor Pull on the first Fair weekend and the Demolition Derby on the last weekend.

For the first time in five years, entertainment returns to the grassy area in front of Dorton Arena. Fairgoers can see daily performances by Dale Jones, who returns to the Fair to entertain families with his inspirational, one-handed juggling act. Steve Trash, an eco-friendly magician, returns and will also perform daily.

On the stage in Kiddieland Fun Park, Michelle's Magical Poodles returns for another year of tricks and surprises. The show's human star, Michelle Harrell, also can be seen performing as Statue Viva. Hubba Bubba the Clown and Magic 4 U offer their own variety of magic with performances daily in Kiddieland.

Roaming the grounds, fairgoers may spot Carrie McQueen juggling and entertaining from the top of her stilts. McQueen returns to the Fair after a few years away. Joining her high above the crowds, will be 9-

Farmers encouraged to test corn for aflatoxin

Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler encourages farmers to have their corn tested for aflatoxin to prevent contamination of feeds and food.

Aflatoxin is a byproduct of the mold Aspergillus flavus, and can be harmful to both humans and livestock. "It's worth a farmer's time and effort to have their corn tested," Troxler said.

Some farmers may need to have corn samples tested for crop insurance purposes.

These samples must be submitted by an insurance adjuster to a grain marketing location certified by the U.S. Department of Agriculture. The tests cost $22.20. Corn samples may also be graded at these locations.

Insurance adjusters should send a 5-pound sample of shelled corn by mail, UPS or FedEx to one of the following USDA-certified grain marketing locations:

Cargill Soybean Plant
Attn: Ben Honeycutt

1400 S. Blount St.
Raleigh, NC 27601
(919) 733-4491

Grain Grading Office
Attn: Judy Grimes
407-G Griffin St.
Elizabeth City, NC 27909
(252) 337-9782

Aflatoxin tests for feeding purposes are free and will be conducted at the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services' Constable Laboratory, 4000 Reedy Creek Road in Raleigh.

This laboratory is not on the Risk Management Agency's approved testing facility list; therefore, results from this location will not be accepted for insurance claims.

Farmers may drop off 5-pound samples of shelled corn at the lab or at one of the following agricultural research stations:

I was recently invited to Maple View Agricultural Center in Hillsborough to take part in a ribbon cutting to celebrate the launch of a solar project in partnership with Duke Energy. I support and have an interest in alternative energy, but I also wanted to learn more about this solar project.

I believe alternative energy has the potential to be a big deal for farmers in the future. Farmers are plenty capable of producing food and fiber crops, and I envision a day where growers will also contribute greatly to our energy resources.

As part of recent legislation requiring power companies to get 12.5 percent of their energy from renewable or energy-efficient measures, Duke Energy has committed $50 million to establish solar energy systems in the state.

The 784-cell solar farm located at the Maple View Agricultural Center is the only one of the Duke projects that involve an agricultural operation. The majority of the other solar projects involve roof-top units.

In addition to the educational center that hosts enrichment activities for school, college, scouting and other groups, Maple View also operates a dairy, a milk bottling and value-added operation, and a store where ice cream, milk and other dairy products made on the farm are sold.

The educational aspect of the farm's offerings, plus the rural setting, was part of the appeal of partnering with Maple View, said Ken Kernodle, a district manager with Duke Energy. Through classroom activities offered at the ag center, children and their parents can learn more about solar energy and see the technology firsthand.

A kiosk in one of the center's four hands-on learning labs constantly measures and reports how much energy is being produced based on the amount of sunlight. One of the kiosk screens shows how many ovens, air conditioners, computers and 15-watt fluorescent bulbs could be powered with the energy being produced at Maple View.

Grain growers should carefully consider marketing options

EDITORS NOTE: The following is a guest article by Nick Lassiter, a grain marketing specialist with the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services.

The fall start of soybean harvest brings a reminder for growers to pay as close attention to marketing and selling their commodities as they do in tending the crop.

There are several things growers need to keep in mind as they market their soybeans, including price volatility, basis - or the difference between the local buying rate and futures prices, and how well capitalized a grain dealer is.

Prices are composed of two variables: the Chicago Mercantile Exchange soybean futures price and a local basis. Basis tends to be relatively stable when compared to futures, but does change often and can have wide variations. Growers are encouraged to stay informed of the basis in their local buying area.

Futures prices are ever changing, and there are many macro issues that affect the underlying futures, including global weather, currency trends and investment strategies of commodity funds.

What this means to growers is that the grain buying industry must have access to large amounts of capital, not only for purchasing grain from producers, but also to maintain adequate margin requirements in their hedging accounts.

Cash flow management, which includes payment for delivered grain, is essential to a business' ongoing profitability and should be part of its risk management program.

Receiving timely payment for commodities should not be taken lightly by growers in this financial environment.

Delivering grain to a well-capitalized, licensed grain dealer should be one of the most important marketing considerations.

View also allows Duke Energy to learn, too. The solar panels capture energy in the field and return it to the grid. Duke Energy will be able to measure the effectiveness of this setup, learn about the size of the line needed to accommodate the energy produced and also find out what happens on a 30-degree day versus a 100-degree day.

Solar energy is expensive right now, Kernodle said, but in the future as technology improves, that cost will likely come down.

The solar project at Maple View, which takes up about an acre of land, is considered a small solar farm. The panels are expected to produce enough energy to run the entire farming operation if the energy wasn't being returned to the grid.

The amount of land used to produce this amount of energy illustrates why it will take more time and improved technology before it will be cost-effective for a farming operation. At some point, space may be an issue, Kernodle said.

Allison Nichols, a founder and manager of the ag center, said Maple View began seriously researching solar panels in 2007, with the idea of putting in a mega watt project such as ones operating in some Northern states. They had to scale back their plans after finding out that they could not sell the energy to a third party in North Carolina.

Nichols said this idea came about because "we wanted to teach more about environmental issues, conservation and renewable energy, and we wanted to reach kids at a young enough age to impress upon them ways to help out the community and the environment."

Nichols said partnering with Duke Energy has helped increase what the center has been able to share with students. "The kiosk is a lifesaver for us because there were not a lot of materials for us to draw from," she said.

While the scale of the project changed, the timing still proved right for the project. Duke Energy was looking to launch solar projects at the same time Maple View was exploring solar options to add to its educational offerings.

As Kernodle said, this project is a "continuation of the community-minded spirit of Bob Nutter and Maple View Farm, and it has perfect synergy with the mission of the ag center and its educational mission."

I couldn't agree more.

Educating the non-farming public about the role farms play in feeding and clothing us, and maybe one day being an energy resource, remains the biggest challenge for agriculture in my opinion.

Too many people don't understand that farms are the source of all the foods we enjoy. We must continue to share that message, and the Maple View Agricultural Center is helping do that.

I look forward to hearing more about what Duke Energy and Maple View learn from this project. As Kernodle noted, "renewable energy is here."

It may take time before the technology is advanced enough to make the energy economically feasible, but it is clear that we must continue to look for energy alternatives.
