Ag Awareness Day at the Legislature draws crowd

I hope you can see from the photos above that we had a great day and great turnout for Ag Awareness Day at the Legislature. For those of you who traveled to Raleigh in support of this event, "Thank You, Thank You, Thank You!"

With warmer weather, I know there is a lot to do on the farm to get ready for the planting season. So I know that being at the rally meant making a personal sacrifice.

More than 1,000 people came together for the rally and office visits with legislators. It was great to have such good turnout, but equally as important, it was great to let legislators know just how big and important agriculture is to our economy, to our rural communities and to the farm families whose livelihood depends on this industry.

Legislators are used to seeing representatives from my department, the N.C. Farm Bureau, the N.C. Grange and other ag and commodity groups, but hearing from a neighbor back home resonates even more. After all, these are the people our legislators are here in Raleigh representing.

Agriculture definitely has friends among the legislators, and I was thankful we had nearly a dozen legislators join us at the rally along with Gov. Pat McCrory, Senate President Pro Tem Phil Berger and Speaker of the House Tim Moore, who were all on the program.

Gov. McCrory has been talking about agriculture since early in his administration. (See Ag Awareness Day, pg. 2)

New manager joins the Charlotte Farmers Market

A former extension agent has been named the new manager of the Charlotte Regional Farmers Market. Amie Newsome replaced Fred Cole, who retired in December. She is the first female full-time manager of the market.

Newsome spent nine years as an agent with Johnston County Cooperative Extension. She also has worked for retail gardening centers, nursery wholesalers and has taught agricultural education at Southern Vance High School in Henderson. Newsome has a degree in horticulture from N.C. State University.

“The Charlotte Regional Farmers Market has been serving farmers and consumers in the Queen City for more than 30 years,” said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. “Amie brings a lot of fresh ideas that will help the market continue to serve Charlotte’s diverse community for years to come.”

Newsome said she wants to create a family atmosphere for shoppers and vendors. She plans to work with farmers and crafters to improve their stands and presentation. In addition, she hopes that vendors will work together to share best practices with one another. Newsome also hopes to explore new partnerships with local food trucks, restaurants, universities and schools.

“There are dozens of farmers markets in the Charlotte area where farmers can sell their products,” Newsome said. “My job is to make sure that those farmers see the Charlotte Regional Farmers Market as a viable option to sell their goods.”

The Charlotte Regional Farmers Market is one of four state-owned farmers markets operated by the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services. The market, located at 1801 Yorkmont Road, is open Tuesdays through Saturdays from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler, right, welcomes ag supporters to the State Capitol grounds for the Ag Awareness Day rally.

tion and he understands that agriculture is not only a strength of this state, but it is also an economic driver with the potential to grow even larger. I was pleased that during the program, the governor recognized agriculture and agribusiness for helping pull up North Carolina’s economy during the last recession. I look forward to working with his administration and some of his public-private initiatives for job growth.

We have a lot to celebrate in North Carolina when it comes to agriculture. This $78 billion industry employs nearly a fifth of the workforce, and it produces food, fiber and fuel. But I believe, it can easily become a $100 billion industry with continued investment in research, marketing and ag exports. I think it was appropriate that the united message we shared with legislators was “Come Grow With Us.” That’s what I intend to see happen with agriculture and agribusiness in the coming years.

This event would not have been possible without the leadership and support of the N.C. Farm Bureau, the N.C. Agribusiness Council, N.C. Grange and N.C. State University, plus many of our agricultural commodity groups.

I am so proud of the cooperation of all of these groups and I am proud of the turnout we had. It is not easy to get so many people together and united in focus, especially when it comes to agriculture, but this event proved once again that North Carolina is the best agricultural state.

Spring is ideal time for homeowners, gardeners to submit soil samples

The N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services urges home gardeners and landscapers to prepare now to submit soil samples over the next few months to optimize growing conditions. Beginning in April and until the last of November, there is no charge for soil testing, and sample results are usually ready within about a week of submitting samples.

Testing for soil pH is extremely important to determine the lime needs for flower beds, vegetable gardens and lawns, said Jagathi Kamalakanthan, agronomist with the department's Soil Testing Lab. If soils are not limed properly, excessive soil acidity can damage roots. Also, an incorrect soil pH can affect nutrient availability.

"Lime begins to work as soon as it is applied, but it is best to apply it well in advance of planting so that there is adequate time for the lime to neutralize the soil acidity," Kamalakanthan said.

Soil samples awaiting testing in the Agronomic Lab.

In addition to lime needs, phosphorus and potassium levels in the soil are also important for proper plant growth. Given the cost of fertilizer today, there is no need to waste money if nutrient levels are adequate. Also, avoiding unnecessary fertilizer applications helps to protect the environ-

For tilled areas such as vegetable gardens, collect soil from the surface to about 6 to 8 inches deep, Kamalakanthan said. In established beds or lawns, collect soil from the surface to a depth of 4 inches. She suggests using a garden trowel to get a "slice" of soil if you do not have a soil probe.

It is also important to make sure a sample adequately represents a given area. To do this, collect soil from 10 to 12 places randomly throughout the area, mixing them well in a plastic bucket. Once mixed, fill the NCDA&CS soil box to the red line indicated on the box. Collect separate samples for different areas- vegetable garden, lawn, flower bed, etc. A soil sample collection guide is available at www.ncagr.gov/agronomi/pdf/files/samhome.pdf.

Plans under way for the Got to Be NC Festival May 15-17

The Got to Be NC Festival presented by Lowes Foods is just a month away, May 15-17 at the State Fairgrounds in Raleigh, and preparations are well under way.

Organizers are accepting applications from tractor clubs and individuals interested in displaying equipment during the event. Clubs and owners from across the state bring rare, restored and original tractors and engines to the event. Application forms can be found online at www.gottobenfestival.com.

In addition to the horsepower these tractors bring, this year's event will feature plenty of kids activities, a daily tractor parade, a bluegrass music contest, a tractor pull, carnival rides, a barbecue cooking contest, BMX bike shows, lumberjacks and much more.

This family-friendly event is North Carolina proud, showcasing the best food, wines and beers made in the state at the N.C. Food, Wine and Beer Expo, plus featuring talented local performers in the Got to Be NC Bluegrass Competition.
