- Aug. 3, 11 a.m. to 1 p.m., Piedmont Triad Farmers Market, Colfax

Farm to School program tops $1 million in sales

For the first time in its 15-year history, the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services' Farm to School program broke the $1 million-sales mark, posting more than $1.2 million in sales of fresh fruits and vegetables during the 2011-12 school year.

"The Farm to School program has continued to grow each year, and this year we saw 14 new school districts participate. I was confident this would be the year we reached $1 million in sales," said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. "A strong finish with strawberry and blueberry orders helped push us over that mark."

Under the program, school systems across the state can order fresh North Carolina produce, which is coordinated and transported to schools by the NCDA&CS Food Distribution and Marketing divisions. Farm-fresh produce offered includes apples, blueberries, broccoli crowns, cabbage, cantaloupes, collards, cucumbers, peaches, romaine lettuce, squash, sprite melons, strawberries, sweet corn, sweet potatoes, tomatoes, watermelons and zucchini.

"While this is a great milestone for the program, I am especially happy that the program is ensuring the freshest (See Farm to School, pg. 3)

N.C. farm families encouraged to apply for Century Farm program

Eligible N.C. farmers interested in joining the Century Farm Family program are encouraged to apply for membership soon if they want to be included in the printed 2012 Century Farm Directory. The deadline for inclusion is Aug. 1.

All members of the program will be invited to the Century Farm Family reunion at the N.C. State Fair on Wednesday, Oct. 17. The event will begin at 11 a.m. in Dorton Arena. Attendees will receive a copy of the 2012 directory.

The reunion, held every four years, honors the heritage of farms that have been owned by the same family continuously for at least 100 years. There are more than 1,600 Century Farms in North Carolina. All counties have a Century Farm except Dare and Swain.

"The family farm is the backbone of North Carolina agriculture," said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. "I want to encourage every eligible farm owner to recognize their family's history by registering as a Century Farm Family and by joining us at the State Fair for a reunion to remember."

Consumers to see changes in ethanol labeling at the pump

Change took place in June

Consumers may have noticed changes to the way ethanol-blended gasoline is labeled at their local gas station thanks to rule changes.

The N.C. Rules Review Commission recently approved changes adopted by the Gasoline and Oil Inspection Board that regulate the way ethanol and other oxygenated gasoline blends can be labeled.

"These changes will not affect the type of fuel provided by gas stations, but it will require station operators across the state to clearly define any blends they sell," said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler.

"Consumers will be able to use the labels to make a more informed decision when they fill up at the pump."

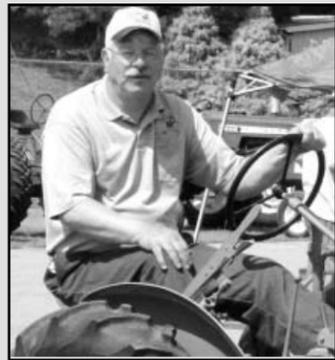

Across the state, 95 percent of gas stations carry some form of ethanol-blended gasoline. Several of those gas stations already displayed some type of labeling voluntarily. The new rules require all gas stations to provide labeling for pumps that dispense blended gasoline.

Under the changes, gasoline containing 10 percent or less by volume of ethanol will be required to include a label that states "may contain up to 10 percent ethanol" or similar wording.

For blends containing between 10 and 15 percent ethanol, the label will state "contains up to 15 percent ethanol" or similar wording. Any blend containing between 15 and 85 percent ethanol will be required to include a label stating the exact volume percentage of ethanol. E85 blends are not affected by the changes.

As I have been making my way around the state lately, I can't help but notice that a number of crops look to be in pretty good condition. I have seen some good looking corn and tobacco, but I have also seen field reports where corn in some areas is starting to become stressed because of the lack of rain. Thankfully, we are not seeing widespread shortages of moisture.

This has been an unusual year in that we had a fairly mild winter, followed by a mild spring. I think some people thought we might see a hot spring, but the temperatures were moderate and we have received a decent amount of rain across the state.

In checking the latest North Carolina Weather and Crops Report put out by the Statistics Division, the information supports what I have seen in different parts of the state. Farmers are reporting 79 percent of soil moisture levels are adequate and 6 percent have a surplus.

On the opposite end of the spectrum, 14 percent of soil moisture levels are short and 1 percent is very short.

According to the U.S. Drought Monitor of North Carolina, there is an abnormally dry band that runs through the middle of the state and also touches along the southern coastline, but at this time we do not have any parts of the state in any higher drought classifications. I hope that holds true throughout the growing season.

The June Monthly Farm Report indicates good harvests of winter wheat and sweet potatoes. The winter wheat harvest is expected to total around 45 million bushels. That is up 8 percent from 2011. Yield is expected to be about 8 bushels per acre less than the record 68 bushels per acre harvested in 2011.

Sweet potato production in 2011 saw a record year with a 32 percent increase in production from the previous record in 2010. A total of 64,000 acres was harvested in 2011, and farmers intend to plant 67,000 acres this year.

In Caswell County, Cooperative Extension is reporting a strong hay crop, with many producers cutting for the second time.

Troxler advises farmers to dust off plans for hurricane season

Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler reminds farmers that now is a good time to prepare for hurricane season.

"Basic emergency planning can lessen any crisis situation," Troxler said. "I encourage all farmers to review their plans and get ready. Assessing what your most pressing needs will be if you should lose power, or are at risk for flooding, can be the difference in salvaging a crop or saving livestock."

Farmers should create emergency plans for their families, workers, equipment and buildings, and have backup plans for electricity and drinkable water for their barns and other critical farm facilities, Troxler said. Livestock operations should have plans in place to address power needs, temporary fencing, and on-site feed capabilities.

Troxler added that now is the time for farmers to think about things like installing a transfer switch so they can use a generator. A properly installed and clearly identified transfer switch is critical for the protection of farm facilities and utility workers, he said.

Troxler offered the following tips for preparing farms for major storms:

Store or secure items or equipment that might blow away.

Identify places to relocate animals from low-lying areas.

Check generators to be sure they are in good working order and secure a sufficient amount of fuel to operate them. Or contact local farm suppliers and rental companies in advance to reserve a generator in the event of a power outage.

Turn off the propane supply at tanks.

Secure propane tanks in the event of flooding to prevent them from floating away.

Move equipment to the highest open ground possible away from trees or buildings that could cause damage.

Mark animals with an identifier so they can be easily returned if lost. Examples are ear tags with name of farm and phone numbers, brands, paint markings on hooves or coat or clipped initials in the hair.

Move feed to higher ground or to a more accessible place in case of flooding or transportation problems.

Pesticide storage areas should be secure, and farmers in low-lying areas should do whatever they can to elevate or move pesticides to locations that are less likely to flood.

Coordinate with neighbors beforehand and discuss what resources can be shared, such as a backhoe or livestock panels.

Keep a list of important phone numbers in order to make calls following a storm, including the local emergency management office, county extension agent, insurance agent, county Farm Service Agency and private veterinarian.

Be prepared to photograph and document damage once storm has passed.

N.C. Museum of History, Syngenta showcase state's rich ag heritage

What began as a few outdoor garden beds showcasing North Carolina's agricultural legacy will soon blossom into a living, thriving exhibit at the N.C. Museum of History in Raleigh. The museum is partnering with Syngenta, located in Research Triangle Park and Greensboro, to make the exhibit grow.

A "first" for the museum, the chronological exhibit "History of the Harvest" will connect the state's agricultural past with today's cutting-edge research and development by universities and companies such as Syngenta. This block-long exhibit will flourish in planting beds along Bicentennial Plaza, a well-traveled walkway between the State Capitol and the State Legislative Building.

"History of the Harvest" will serve as an outdoor classroom that gives visitors and passers-by a hands-on opportunity to learn firsthand about North Carolina agriculture, from medicinal plants grown by American Indians before European contact to new corn hybrids developed by using advanced plant-breeding technology.

Syngenta's $15,000 sponsorship provides funding support and helps the museum bring the history of the state's agriculture from the past to the present. Syngenta Flowers also provided flowers and Fafard potting mix to the exhibit — and as a result, nearly 1,000 flowers will brighten the museum's entranceway.

"The museum's focus is historical, looking back at how people have interacted with the environment," said Emily Grant, youth programs coordinator at the Museum of History. "Our partnership with Syngenta helps bring that story to the present by looking at current trends and practices in the field of agriculture. Syngenta's contributions to agricultural research and development are making history around the world."

Visitors to "History of the Harvest" will also learn about agricultural-related contributions to the state's economy, how North Carolinians have used plants, and the global issues of hunger and sustainable agriculture.

"Syngenta values the opportunity to not only educate museum visitors on the rich agricultural foundation of North Carolina, but also to share the research and development conducted within the state," said Michiel van Lookeren Campagne, president of Syngenta Biotechnology. "North Carolina has always flourished as a leader in research and development, and it continues to pave the way for future innovations in agriculture. Working with the museum on this exhibit allows us to illustrate this evolution — where we've been, where we are now, and where our innovations can take us in the future."

Crop report

The wheat crop in Caswell also received strong marks.

In Catawba County, Extension reports that a late spring freeze did hurt wheat, but that yields were still respectable.

Lee County Extension reported that tobacco is looking great and ponds are on the rise.

While we have mostly focused on field crops, I can tell you that all this means shoppers will find plenty of farm-fresh goodness at farmers markets across the state. Whether you are looking for corn or cabbage, peaches or peppers, you can find it in season at local farmers markets along with many other fruits and vegetables. If you are looking for a local market or roadside stand in your area, go to our N.C. Farm Fresh website at NCFarmFresh.com.

Remember, when you want the best, it's Got to Be NC.

NCDA & CS Standards Division inspects weigh-station scales used to check the load size of commercial trucks

Most summer travelers pass by the state's eight weigh stations without a second glance. But for long-haul truck drivers and other commercial transportation vehicles, weigh stations are an important stop that ensures the safety of all travelers. Instrumental to that safety is a thorough inspection by the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services' Standards Division.

Recently, the Standards Division hosted about 25 highway patrol officers, N.C. Department of Transportation officials, state and federal inspectors for a three-day workshop to review new requirements for heavy-scale inspections.

The group visited the Hillsborough Eastbound Weigh Station on Interstate 40, which weighs about 150,000 vehicles a month, for a hands-on demonstration of the new inspection technique.

Each truck that passes through the weigh station is measured on three independent scales, the steer, drive and trailer, named after the part of the truck that is weighed. The three weights are combined for a total load weight. DOT officials cross reference the total amount with weight requirements. In extreme cases, an overweight truck may be pulled off the highway until the load can be lightened.

To inspect the scales, the team first checks the automatic zero tracking. The tracking allows scales to return to zero if light and temporary weight is applied, for instance during a rain shower. The scales at the Hillsborough station will automatically track up to 80 pounds.

Next, the team brings out

An NCDA & CS Standards Division inspector positions the 5,500-pound steel test cart on the truck scales to check the weigh-station equipment for accuracy.

the "moon rover." The moon rover is a six-wheeled, gas-powered, steel test cart that weighs exactly 5,500 pounds.

A hydraulic arm is used to fill the cart with certified 1,000-pound and 500-pound weights. After the rover is filled, it is moved to different quadrants on each scale and weighed.

The recent inspection revealed two of the three scales were out of compliance.

The scales were shut down until the DOT and N.C. Highway Patrol could contact the scale service provider for repair, after which the scales will be retested for compliance.

Weigh-station scales are just one of the areas inspected by the Standards Division. The division also inspects all commercial scales used for retail or wholesale transactions, packaging for correct measurement or weight, scales for mulch and produce during peak seasons, milk, take-out scales at buffet restaurants, gas pumps, ice factories, drug scales for law enforcement, terminal meters and taxi cab meters, just to name a few. To find out more about the types of things the Standards Division inspects, go to www.ncagr.gov/standard.

Woodland stewardship workshops planned

The N.C. Forest Service is joining N.C. State University's Forestry and Environmental Outreach Program and other natural resource agencies in hosting a series of four workshops for private forest landowners in Western North Carolina.

"The 'Woodland Steward Series: Mountains Program' is designed to educate woodland owners and managers, especially those with 20 acres or less, on the basic principles of forest stewardship," said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. "The workshop is being conducted by a team of land management experts from federal and state agencies, universities and the private sector."

The series takes place between July 18 and Aug. 17 in the Asheville area. Each workshop will be led by natural resource and land management specialists and will feature hands-on activities in the field and instruction in the classroom. Introductory information on a wide variety of land management topics will be provided.

Following is the schedule:

-- "Discovering Your Land: Basic Land Management Skills," Wednesday, July 18, 9 a.m.-4:30 p.m. at the Cradle of Forestry in Brevard, and Thursday, July 19, 9 a.m.-noon at the N.C. Arboretum in Asheville.

-- "Native Landscaping & Water Management," Thursday, July 19, 1-4:30 p.m., and Friday, July 20, 9 a.m.-4:30 p.m. at the N.C. Arboretum.

-- "Woodscaping Your Woodlands & Firewise Management," Wednesday, Aug. 15, 9 a.m.-4:30 p.m. and Thursday, Aug. 16, 9 a.m.-noon at Bent Creek Experimental Forest in Asheville.

-- "Stewardship, Recreation & Liability," Thursday, Aug. 16, 1-4:30 p.m. at Bent Creek, and Friday, Aug. 17, 9 a.m.-4:30 p.m. at the Cradle of Forestry in Brevard.

Registration is $50 per participant per workshop and $25 for a spouse or other family member. Woodland owners and managers are encouraged to attend one or more of the workshops according to their interests.

The deadline for registration is one week prior to each workshop, and attendance in at least three of the four workshops is required to graduate. Credit toward N.C. Environmental Education Certification is available. Please inquire about other continuing education certification.

To learn more about the series or to register, contact Addie Thornton, course coordinator, at 919-515-9563 or by email at addie_thornton@ncsu.edu. More information is online at www.ncsu-feop.org/woodlandstewards.

Farm to School

fruits and vegetables are being served in school meals and that it is also providing new markets for our state's farmers," Troxler said,

Nearly 1,600 schools participated in the Farm to School program during the 2011-12 school year, ordering more than 1.5 million pounds of fresh North Carolina produce. The program served more than 1 million students this year, up 100,000 from the 2010-11 school year.

Among the biggest sellers were apple slices, strawberries and blueberries.

Proof of ownership for 100 years or more by the same family is required. This proof can be an abstract of a title, an original deed or land patents. Other authentic land records may be acceptable in some cases.

Farmers should review rules before burning agricultural debris

Farmers should review open burning laws before burning off crop residue to ensure they stay in compliance with state air quality rules. The N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services and the Department of Environment and Natural Resources Division of Air Quality created standards for acceptable ag burning without a permit in 2009.

"Open burning without a permit can only be done for disease control, pest control or to burn crop residue if necessary to ensure seed and soil contact," said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. "The guidance document goes into additional detail about what is or is not acceptable."

N.C. law prohibits most open burning because the smoke from outdoor fires can cause serious health problems and contribute to air pollution. Under state law, DAQ can assess fines up to $25,000 per violation.

Although farmers may not need a permit from DAQ, farmers may still need to obtain a burn permit from the N.C. Forest Service if burning will take place within 500 feet of any woodlands. Burn permits are free and good for 30 days from date of issuance. The online application is at www.ncforestservice.gov.

Troxler encourages farmers to contact their local N.C. Forest Service office or local fire department before burning to ensure that conditions are appropriate for the task. Questions about air quality should be directed to regional DAQ offices, which can be found at www.ncair.org.

Zucchini chips recipe is a delicious way to make use of garden abundance

If you enjoy spicy food then these chips are for you, they have a kick. If not, just cut back on the amount of cayenne and black pepper.

These are great with ranch dressing and can be served as a side dish or appetizer.

Zucchini Chips

2 ½ cups sliced NC zucchini (approx. 2 large zucchini)
¾ cup bread crumbs
¾ cup grated parmesan cheese
¾ tsp. cayenne pepper
¾ tsp. black pepper
¼ tsp. salt
½ cup all-purpose flour
1 cup buttermilk
Slice the zucchini into ¼ inch slices and lightly salt

This zucchini chip recipe is baked, making it a lighter dish for summer.

on both sides. Combine flour and buttermilk in shallow dish and set aside. Combine breadcrumbs, parmesan cheese, cayenne pepper, black pepper and salt in a shallow dish and set aside.

Preheat oven to 425 degrees and lightly coat a baking sheet with cooking spray. Dredge the zucchini chips in the buttermilk mixture and then into the breadcrumb mixture giving each side of the zucchini a light coating of breadcrumbs.

Place all the zucchini chips onto the baking sheet and bake for 25-30 minutes, turning once after half the cooking time has elapsed. Sprinkle with salt when they come out of the oven and serve warm.

Got to Be NC RV and Big Cart on the road in July

The N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services' popular marketing vehicles, the Got to Be NC RV and the Big Cart, are making their rounds this summer at special events and grocery and retail stores across the state.

Following is a list of stops in July:
