Deer reduction program offered

Students from N.C. State University are working this summer to reduce crop loss caused by deer.

If farm income is being lost because of deer damage and you would like to receive additional income earned through hunting opportunities, then this program may be for you. Enrollment of farmland is taking place now.

Landowners, farmers leasing land and hunting clubs who hunt on farmland may participate, receiving $2/acre for hosting a 15-day hunt in 2013 and a hunt kit for long-term deer management and income opportunity.

For more about how to sign up, call your Cooperative Extension Service Office and ask about Farmers Manage Deer in your county, or call Guy and Judy Gardner at 919-552-9449.

The project is made possible by the N.C. Wildlife Federation, N.C. Tobacco Trust Fund Commission, N.C. Soybean Producers Association, N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission, N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services, Hunters for the Hungry and the Quality Deer Management Association.

Quarantine established for Granville, Person and Vance counties for emerald ash borer

Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler recently signed an emergency quarantine order restricting the movement of hardwood firewood, ash nursery stock and other ash materials from Granville, Person and Vance counties following the confirmation of the emerald ash borer in trees there. This marks the first time emerald ash borer has been found in the state.

North Carolina is the 20th state in the country to confirm the presence of the destructive pest, following the discovery of an adult beetle and other signs of borer activity in trees in Granville County by staff with the N.C. Forest Service. Additional surveying found signs of emerald ash borer activity in the bordering counties of Person and Vance.

"The detection of this pest is not unexpected, especially given the presence of the beetle in Virginia and Tennessee," said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. "We have been surveying and trapping sites along the state borders for several years for any signs of the movement of this pest. A federal quarantine will be coming shortly, but I am invoking this emergency quarantine to take every step possible to restrict the movement of emerald ash borer any further."

The beetle was first detected in the U.S. in Michigan in 2002. It is responsible for the death or decline of tens of millions of ash trees across the country.

Under the state quarantine, all hardwood firewood and plants and plant parts of the ash tree -- including living, dead, cut or fallen, green lumber, stumps, roots, branches and composted and uncomposted chips -- cannot be moved outside the three counties.

The N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services' Plant Industry Division and N.C. Forest Service are working in cooperation with the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service.

"Detecting and preventing the human spread of the emerald ash borer is a huge undertaking," said Deborah Stewart, USDA state plant health director for North Carolina. "We need everyone's cooperation to minimize the impacts of this pest."

Symptoms of emerald ash borer in ash trees include a general decline in the appearance of the tree, such as thinning from the top down and loss of leaves. Clumps of shoots, also known as epicormic sprouts, emerging from the trunk of the tree and increased woodpecker activity are others.

The emerald ash borer is not the only pest that can cause these.

Emerald ash borers overwinter as larvae. Adult beetles begin to emerge from May to June and can be found in the summer months. The adult beetle is one-fourth to a half-inch long and is slender and metallic green. When the adults emerge from a tree, they leave behind a D-shaped exit hole. The larvae can also create serpentine tunneling marks, known as feeding galleries, which are found under the bark of the infested trees.

Home and landowners are encouraged to report any symptomatic activity in ash trees to the NCDA&CS Plant Industry Division hotline at 1-800-206-9333 or by email at newpest@ncagr.gov. The pest can affect any of the four types of ash trees grown in the state.

WNC ag exports workshop slated for July 16

The N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services will host a workshop July 16 in Asheville for agribusiness owners interested in exporting their products. The workshop, "Explore Exporting: The World is Waiting," is customized for food and agriculture-related businesses, but is open to all small businesses in Western North Carolina.

"U.S. consumers make up just 5 percent of the global market," said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. "This workshop is a great way for small businesses in Western North Carolina to learn how they can reach the other 95 percent of the world's market."

The half-day seminar will feature presentations from the department, the Southern United States Trade Association, Global Business Solutions Inc. and Miss Jenny's Pickles. Topics include finding your market, financing and protecting your international transactions, and assistance for small food and agriculture companies. The event also includes networking opportunities and a question-and-answer session with the speakers.

The workshop will take place from 8:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. at the Renaissance Asheville Hotel. It is free, but registration is required before July 9. People interested in participating can register at www.susta.org/services/outreach_events_Ashville13.html.

North Carolina is the 11th largest agricultural exporter in the nation. In 2011, the state exported more than $3.7 billion worth of agricultural products. To learn more about N.C. agricultural exports, go to www.ncagr.gov/markets/international/index.htm.

It's summertime, which means many kids are out of school on summer break and activities on the farm are in full swing. I have heard reports from across the state that the cool spring weather has delayed some crops a bit, but the mild weather has also been enjoyable.

I want to encourage readers as they are making summer vacation plans or trying to decide on fun summer activities for kids, to consider agricultural activities as an option. Spending part of your day at a pick-your-own field or a local farmers market is great way to teach children where their food comes from. I think helping kids make that connection will help them better appreciate the abundance of food we all enjoy and the hard work that goes into it.

Another benefit is that by buying local fruits, vegetables and meats, parents can help kids understand the difference that freshness makes. In North Carolina, we have seen strong consumer interest in "buying local," and I believe this is directly related to the freshness factor. Foods that are not being transported across the country just taste better.

We are fortunate in North Carolina that farmers grow a diverse range of commodities, which gives us great access to farm fresh products most of the year. Many farms across the state now offer agritourism features on the farm, which also makes for many fun memories.

Each agritourism farm is different, and I am constantly impressed by the many creative activities these farms offer visitors. You can find everything from petting farms, hayrides, corn mazes, slides, miniature trains, fishing, bird watching, gem mining, scavenger hunts, special dinners featuring products from the farm, pumpkin patches and more.

In addition to field trip activities, many farms offer their facilities to host birthday parties, receptions or other special events. If you are planning a special event and want a unique location for it, an agritourism farm might fit the bill.

You can find information on local markets and agritourism adventures online at www.ncfarmfresh.com/ and www.ncagr.gov/markets/agritourism. Click on the Find an Agritourism Farm link for listings by county.

We have a lot of great things going on in agriculture in North Carolina, from growing delicious food to offering great outdoor adventures on the farm. Make this a summer of discovery!

Cogongrass, a noxious weed, discovered in Stanly County
Small clump is second confirmed infestation in North Carolina

A small patch of cogongrass, considered by many experts to be one of the world's worst weeds, was discovered recently in Stanly County by the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services.

This is the second confirmed infestation in North Carolina; the first was in Pender County in May 2012.

The Stanly County stand covers an area less than 200 square feet. It is not clear how this small clump started, but cogongrass can easily become established if seeds or rhizomes are transported as a contaminant on equipment or on commodities, such as hay, that are moved from other states where the weed is established.

The department's N.C. Forest Service and Plant Industry Division are surveying land around the infestation and will treat the stand with herbicide.

Cogongrass has surpassed kudzu in the number of acres it covers in the Southeast. The largest infestations are in Alabama, Florida and Mississippi.

Cogongrass was inadvertently introduced into the U.S. in 1912 near Mobile, Ala., arriving in a shipment of Satsuma oranges from Japan that used the grass as packing material. It was also introduced intentionally into Florida and Mississippi as a potential feed, but research trials proved cogongrass unsuitable for that use.

Considered a federal noxious weed, cogongrass has the ability to invade diverse habitats and quickly displace native vegetation, changing the way the ecosystem functions. For example, cogongrass will make longleaf pine communities susceptible to more frequent and hotter wildfires than normal. Even though longleaf pine is adapted to fire, seedlings are unable to tolerate the more frequent and hotter fires created by established cogongrass.

N.C. Forest Service workers discovered the Stanly County infestation during a routine evaluation of a stand of trees that had recently been thinned to improve tree health. It was confirmed by the Plant Industry Division.

The public is encouraged to learn more about cogongrass and how to identify it by visiting www.cogongrass.org. Suspected infestations should be reported to the department by calling 1-800-206-9333 or sending an email to newpest@ncagr.gov.

Cogongrass can be easily distinguished from other grasses during May and June when seed heads are likely to emerge. The seed heads are cylindrical in shape, about 2 to 8 inches long, white and fluffy. The root system of cogongrass is also distinctive because of the sharp shoot tips that sprout from the roots.

Tarheel Tourtiere takes first place in Tar Heel Pork Challenge

Contest sponsored by the N.C. Pork Council

Jane Blanco of Raleigh took home first place for her Tarheel Tourtiere in the N.C. Pork Council Tar Heel Pork Challenge at the 2012 N.C. State Fair. She won $200 for her recipe.

Fred Woodard of Smithfield won second place and $150 for Smoked Pork Stuffed Peppers. Bill Kirk of Cary won $100 for his third-place recipe, Carolina Pork Bowl. John Norris of Cary received an honorable mention and $50 for Sweet Heat Pork Rolls.

Recipes required at least 4 ounces of ground pork per serving and were judged on taste appeal, appearance, originality and ease of preparation.

The first place recipe follows:

Tarheel Tourtiere

1½ tablespoon butter
1 medium onion, minced
2 cloves garlic, minced
2 pounds ground pork

¾ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon black pepper
¼ teaspoon ground mace
1/8 teaspoon cayenne pepper
½ cup raisins
1 tablespoon cornstarch
1/3 cup water
2 medium gala apples, cored and sliced
¾ cup Monterrey Jack cheese, shredded
2 packs refrigerated crescent rolls
Glaze
½ cup powdered sugar
2-3 teaspoons apple cider, apple juice or maple syrup

Preheat oven to 350 degrees and line baking sheet with non-stick aluminum foil.

Sauté onion & garlic in butter until transparent.

Add ground pork, salt, pepper, mace and cayenne and brown thoroughly. Mix in raisins. Combine cornstarch and water and dissolve completely; add to pork mixture and blend well. Allow pork to cool to room temperature (this step may also be prepared in advance with mixture refrigerated or frozen until ready to use).

To assemble, unroll crescent dough and separate into 16 triangles. Arrange triangles in a circle on the baking sheet with the points facing out and the triangles overlapping at the center (center of ring should be about five inches in diameter. Evenly spread pork mixture over the widest end of the triangles. Sprinkle with shredded cheese and top with apple slices. Bring points of triangles up over the filling and tuck under the wide ends of the dough at center of the ring (filling will not be completely covered).

Bake 20-25 minutes until golden. Cool and drizzle with glaze. Serves six to eight.

The deadline for the August issue of the Agricultural Review is July 1; the deadline for the September issue is Aug. 1.
